THE BRITISH BIRD MANUAL.

By H. NORMAN.

The Most Thorough and Practical Work on British Birds ever Produced. Published in two parts and complete bound in cloth. Part I. Hardbills. Deals in the fullest manner with Linnets, Goldfinches, Bullfinches, and all other varieties of Finches. Part II. Softbills. With Blackbirds, Thrushes, Jackdaws, Larks, and most of the more commonly kept species of insectivorous birds.

This work, lucidly written by a noted specialist, contains fullest directions for Hand-rearing, Keeping, and Exhibiting the most popular of our British Birds. Each bird is dealt with separately, its nesting habits, etc., are fully explained, and these, together with a description of its general characteristics, will enable the novice to easily identify the various species. Each part contains a coloured plate and numerous black and white illustrations by the author.

A HANDY BOOK.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS

make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES BOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, and a leading Expert and Judge. Edited by G. E. Weston and C. A. House.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all are considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Boulton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Boulton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers in all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

USE DITCHFIELD'S

Famous Bird Medicines as supplied to the

THE WORLD'S PREMIER CAGE BIRD REMEDIES.

NOT SINGING

AND IN THE SOFT MOUTH.

If you have any birds you are relying upon for the coming breeding season that are not singing or have just gone into soft mouth, we guarantee you a perfect cure. DITCHFIELD'S TONIC DROPS and DITCHFIELD'S FAMOUS REVIVO given on alternate days will bring any bird into breeding condition. THESE MEDICINES ARE INVALUABLE FOR BIRDS JUST BEFORE THE BREEDING SEASON. Mr. Hatton, Atherton, writes: "Your medicines for Soft Mouth are excellent stuff. They have cured me four birds in the soft mouth, which are now in full song." For bronchitis, wheezing, and hoarseness, get DITCHFIELD'S SPECIAL LUNG TONIC, the grandest medicines ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. For constitutional weakness and debility and for birds that are run down, or in slack feather, get DITCHFIELD'S FAMOUS REVIVO. This medicine is absolutely unequalled for giving new life and vigour to the birds, and for producing that smart tight appearance of the plumage so much desired by all fanciers.

All the above remedies are sold in 1/2 and 2/- bottles; two 1/2 bottles for 1/1, three for 2/3, four for 3/6; two 2/- bottles for 3/6, three for 5/-, four for 6/3, and are sent away per return of post from—

FRANK DITCHFIELD, BIRD SPECIALIST, OLDHAM.

THE SONG Thrush and Blackbird.—Full directions how to keep these favourite songsters in the best possible condition; together with directions for hand-rearing the young and the selection of show birds, will be found in "Nutshell No. 4," 2/6, post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. (286)

SOFTBILL keepers, take expert advice before proceeding to buy and keep the larger species of insectivorous birds. You will then have no trouble in keeping your pets in the best of health. This advice is offered in "Nutshell No. 26," by H. J. Fulljames. It is a wonderful little work, dealing with most varieties in a highly interesting and instructive manner. Foods and their preparation, and the various styles of cages also receive full attention. Can you breed Mealworms? This booklet tells you how. Post free, 2/6, from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Look at our list of agents; call on the nearest and get it for 2d.

Mr. J. Ramsay, Partick, writes in respect of the voluntary offering for the Widow Fulton and family that the draw is postponed until March 25.

Mr. W. G. Andrews, hon. sec., West Bromwich C.B.S., writes that the society has changed its headquarters to the Ivy House Hotel, Handsworth.

Mr. W. J. Kewn writes that his unflighted yellow-green Yorkshire which won 1st in the novice class at the North Liverpool C.B.S. show won also special for best bird in show.

I have received the beautifully bound volume of CAGE BIRDS, and I was surprised to find such a splendid book, writes Mr. R. McKeon, and I am delighted with it. I have been lucky with your specials, for I also won your 10s. championship special two years ago.

Please mention that I have removed, and that my private address, writes Mr. J. W. Ramsden, is 6, Wyatt Park Road, Streatham Hill, S.W., to which all letters should be addressed—excepting orders for pepper, which should be sent to my Brixton address as usual.

By a printer's error the advt. of Mr. J. Dewar, Bradford, Manchester, was last week inserted under Norwich instead of Yorkshires. We are asked to reply to those who have written for Norwich Canaries that the advertiser does not keep this variety. The advt. appears this week under Yorkshires, its proper heading.

Please accept my thanks for the placing of my buff cock on the front of CAGE BIRDS, Feb. 4 issue, writes Mr. A. C. Shirley. It is an excellent drawing, and am sure it gives great credit to your artist. This bird has won for me two firsts, three seconds, and two thirds, besides several members' 1sts and specials. He has just recently changed hands for a good sum, and am sure I wish his new owner the best of luck with him.

In "Bird Notes" for February, the journal of the Foreign Bird Club, Mr. Shore Bailey gives an account of the past breeding season in the Boyers House aviaries; Mr. G. E. Rattigan writes on the nesting and rearing of Landrails in captivity; the hon. editor, Mr. Wesley T. Page, continues his notes on "The Endurance of Birds," and the Marquis of Tavistock concludes the article on "Psephenus Parakeets at Liberty."

What is the Best Singing Bird?

Readers are invited to answer the question here propounded, and give reasons for their preference. Replies should not exceed 500 words in length, and should give short particulars as to the proper caging and feeding of the bird selected, which may, of course, be either a Canary, a British or Foreign bird, or a Mule or Hybrid. For the best answer received, not later than Monday next, Feb. 28, we shall award a prize of five shillings, or books to value, at the winner's option. The editor's decision as to which is the best answer must be accepted as final, and we reserve the right to publish any of the replies sent in. Copies of the issue containing the first selections will be sent to the matrons of military hospitals to guide them in their choice of a singing bird to brighten the hours of our wounded heroes. Envelopes should be addressed "The Editor, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C."

Dates of 1916 Bird Shows.

Further shows for which dates have been fixed are: City and Suburban A.C.B., F.F. show, July 5, Annual, Nov. 8, 9; Leicester Hand-in-Hand, Nov. 4, 6; Abertillery, Oct. 18, judge, Mr. J. Robson, Coventry O.S., Nov. 15, judge, Mr. J. Robson. Secretaries should make a note of these and other dates as they are published, so that clashing may be avoided as far as possible.

A Red-throated Diver is reported to have been seen swimming in the Thames near Charing Cross Bridge, probably driven in by the recent storms, for although the Red-throated Diver often ascends rivers and sometimes visits inland waters, it is certainly a rare visitor to Charing Cross.

"British Birds," for February, one shilling monthly, Messrs. Witherby, High Holborn, opens with an account of the progress of the British Birds marking scheme, with some interesting statistics, from which we gather that nearly 68,000 birds have been ringed and liberated during the seven years' existence of the organisation. Miss Maud D. Haviland writes of the Lapland Bunting on the Yenesei. Mr. Witherby continues his notes on the "Moulting of the British Passeres," and the rest of the issue is occupied by the usual interesting "Notes."

Stonechats in the Calder Valley.

A pair of Stonechats which have frequented a reservoir in the Calder Valley since October have now been joined by a third. This is said to be the first record for more than twenty years in the district.

What Soldiers Read.

Miss Beatrice Harraden, the well-known novelist, says that a book on bird life, or CAGE BIRDS, is among the books asked for by the wounded soldiers at the military hospital, Endell Street, London, at which she is joint librarian.

Winter Visitors.

Of the Fieldfares and Redwings, the two Thrushes which come to us from northern climes for the winter, the former are usually by far the more numerous, large flocks coming to our northern counties between September and November, and spreading west and south-west to their winter quarters. During the past autumn, however, the proportions have been reversed, large numbers of Redwings having been noticed from September onwards, while the Fieldfares were later in arriving and the flocks have been smaller.

NOTES FOR NOVICES.

There is plenty of room at the top in the hobby of Mule or Hybrid breeding.

A novice who is lucky may get there at one step.

But he doesn't do it always.

And he is not likely to beat the old hands at producing Hybrids of varieties which have already become popular.

His chance is in producing something novel, and there are many possible crosses that offer such a chance.

British hens are the more likely to go to nest the more closely their natural surroundings are imitated.

For Canary hens an ordinary breeding cage will answer.

Do not hurry in pairing up for Hybrid breeding; there is plenty of time yet.

In the meantime read all you can about the subject; there is no time to be lost in this direction.

A Robin in a Bird-shop.

A Robin recently entered the shop of an Edinburgh naturalist through the back-window, and has refused to vacate his comfortable quarters. It has the free run of the premises, flying from cage to cage, and even taking excursions into the street, but never failing to return. Its favourite place is the mat at the door in the front shop, which is usually left open, so that it has every chance to effect its liberty if it cares. It now answers to the name of "Joey," and comes quite readily to pick a mealworm held in the hand. It showed great displeasure when two other Robins attempted to enter the shop by the back window, and successfully beat them back.

The Rook Reasoned it Out.

A piece of suet was suspended by a long string, from the branch of a tree for the benefit of the Tits. A Rook approached, and endeavoured clumsily to emulate the smaller birds by "flying dives" at the suet, but without avail. A little later, it alighted upon the branch above, and endeavoured to gain the desired morsel by gathering up the string in its bill. When, however, it opened its mouth to seize the suet, the string escaped and the prize was left dangling tantalisingly out of reach as before. Again the Rook seemed to be trying to size up the problem. At last, it began to haul again with its bill, this time placing its feet upon each length of string recovered, and in this manner was able to grasp the coveted food.—"The Scotsman."

Another Half-Sovereign to be Won.

Six questions are here submitted, and a prize of ten shillings, or books to value at winner's option, will be awarded to the sender of the best answer to any one of them. Replies to any or all of the questions may be sent in, but each separate answer must be on a separate sheet or sheets of paper. The editor's decision as to the best answer must be accepted as final, and we reserve the right to publish any of the replies sent in. Answers must be addressed to the Editor, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., and must reach us not later than Friday, March 3.

1.—What variety of Canary is the best for keeping as a household pet; why is it the best, how should it be caged, and how should it be fed?

2.—If you had a friend who wished to start Canary breeding with one pair of birds, without any previous knowledge, how would you advise him to begin, and how should he proceed throughout the breeding season?

3.—What is the best British seed-eating bird for a novice, and how should he cage and feed it?

4.—What is the best British insectivorous bird for a novice, and how should he cage and feed it?

5.—What is the most likely pair of birds to produce rare or unique hybrids, and how should they be housed and fed? If young should result, what special treatment would they require?

6.—What would be a nice small collection of foreign birds that might be kept by anyone without especial skill, and how should they be treated?

The Crests at the Holborn Hall Show.

A Few Independent Observations by Mr. A. J. Watcham, sec. of the London C.B.A.

WHAT a wonderful show! Who dares to speak of decadence in the "King of the Fancy"? If any are now bold enough to so assert I can only say I am sorry they did not visit the Holborn Hall show, for they would most assuredly have had their erroneous opinions dispelled. Certainly praise and admiration for the Crest and Crestbred classes reverberated throughout the show.

I spent as much of the time as I could afford in the aisle in which this variety was staged, and the comments of fanciers alone were an education. They varied, and some even made me feel sorry for the judge. It is always thus.

I tender sincere congratulations to Mrs. Montagu Scott, who has so quickly reached the top rung of the ladder with what cannot but be described as a wonderful stud. However, in pondering on this, the fact occurs to me that in three classes the palm had to be handed to three other individual exhibitors, which only goes to prove the fallacy of stating—as I have heard it stated—that the best are only in the hands of a few, for let it be remembered this was but a "members' show."

Many birds stood cardless with merit sufficient to gain premier honours, at most "open" shows, and in respect of this I have in my mind's eye a monster of a Grizzle that had to be satisfied with but a small mention, and a most splendid Crestbred, which had unfortunately to be relegated owing, I think, by reason of the amount of "John Knights" that had been allowed to remain in its plumage. At least so it appeared to me. These are but two instances. Many more could be quoted. I venture to think the "Crest Classes at the Holborn Hall" will be a subject often quoted in years to come. The adult hen Crest class was perhaps not quite the equal of the other classes, which fact is no doubt due to most fanciers hesitating to risk their best hens at so late a period.

Two well-known Crest men were having the proverbial "Hammer and Tongs" over the placing of the 1st and 2nd awards in the Crested cocks. Well, I vouch myself an opinion on these. The judge has it all the way, the winning bird undoubtedly possesses a far superior quality of crest feather, better radiation, greater density and droop.

What a superb hen was Mr. Bale's unflighted Crestbred, and what a gem Mr. Smith's 1915 Crest! Miss Onslow also deserves the greatest credit for her exhibits, and her 1915 Crest hen will yet prove something of a stormer. Although facing defeat here, yet not disgraced. The thought occurred and recurred to me as I gazed on the successful specimens, the product of human selection in breeding—"Alas," the ladder is of great length, but surely I may be forgiven for covetousness. Verily, I claim that the joint societies have contributed considerably towards "Keeping the Home Fires Burning."

The Importance of Taking Care of the Finch in Mule Breeding.

By JOHN JEFFREY (Battersea.)

IS it art, or is it luck? Well, I would say it is both, for without luck it could not be done, without art you would not be able to get your breeding Finches into condition, and if you don't get your Finches into condition you will not get the luck. So you must have art and luck to be a successful Mule breeder.

I have been successful with Goldfinches, Greenfinches, and Siskins. With the Yellowhammer I twice had full eggs, of which one hatched and I kept the young one alive for five days. I may say that was the second Yellowhammer I had full eggs from.

If you want to breed Mules you must study your Finches. Find out what they do best on, for you cannot get all birds to come into condition on the same food. Experience has taught me that what one Finch will thrive on will starve another, so to be successful you must study each bird you intend to breed from.

The Goldfinch I find is the worst bird to get into condition. I give mine a good stock mixture of equal parts hemp, flax, teazel, and canary, all seeds of good quality, and twice a week I let them have half a teaspoonful of thistle and dandelion seed. If I find a Finch does not thrive on this mixture I put him on a diet of nothing but hemp. I have brought backward Finches into condition with flax and rape only, but I am not a great believer in rape seed.

Always place a large piece of cuttlefish in the wires of your cages for your Finches to pick at, it keeps their digestion in grand order. In the winter I let my British birds have a little bit of sweet apple, and as the breeding season comes on I let them have lettuce, watercress, and dandelion leaves.

I have now a Finch from which I tried to breed, and was unsuccessful while he was fed on a mixture, so I changed his food to hemp and nothing else, and last season he had ten young from the same hens he was up with the year before. I am convinced that all Finches will breed if the owners will only study them and find out what suits them.

The Greenfinch is very easy to get into condition; he will thrive on almost any mixture with a little oats and sunflower seed added. If you are going in for light Mule breeding, I should advise you to have a clear yellow hen, Norwich type preferred, with a touch of Cinnamon blood in her. You may have the luck to get a light Mule or two; if you do not you will get good coloured dark ones. I always keep my Finches in breeding cages, for I don't like small cages. If you want your birds to be healthy, you must give them room, and when the breeding season comes round you will have no need to disturb your Finch by changing his cage.

Nomads of Resident Species.

Among the interesting records in the February issue of "British Birds" of the recovery of ringed wild birds, there are several which mark the travels of individual birds of species which as a whole are resident. Of these, a young Linnet marked in Kent in July last was found in the Basses Pyrénées four months later; a nestling Song-Thrush ringed in Lancashire in April 1914 was recovered in Pontadillo, Spain, in October, 1914; and a Robin marked in Berkshire, in May, 1912, was found in South Holland, in November 1914.

Rough on Rollers.

In an article, "Bismarck in the Bird room," in the London "Graphic" of Jan. 15, Mr. Frank Finn says of the Roller Canary: "The Canary has naturally an exuberant disposition and a great variety of notes of various pitches, as everyone knows. The Germans liked its abundant output, but were offended by so much originality. Accordingly, they set themselves to prune, reduce and regulate the Canary's voice; they took him young and educated him under highly qualified Canary-professors; they supplemented the tuition of these feathered pedagogues by a hydraulic organ; and they instituted public competitions—you could have seen and heard such before the war even at our bird shows—where the Canaries, each in a tiny cage enclosed in a box with two air-holes in the front, to ensure concentration and reduce exuberance, performed before the judge. This functional, grim and blue-pencilled, had before him a scoring sheet, on which he marked down all false notes. Any Canary which so far forgot himself as to 'schmitter' or 'schnatter,' or indulged in an 'Aufzug,' got his bad mark accordingly; this was the breed perfected to such a pitch that the song has become an absolutely mechanical trill, so that one wonders why the admirers of such refined Canaries did not all buy bird-organs and save the cost of cages and canary seed."

HYBRID BREEDING IN A CAGE.

By H. BURROWS, Southall.

A successful fancier gives his method of breeding Hybrids, and shows how the fascinating hobby may be taken up with little trouble or expense.

I AM writing my experience of Hybrid breeding in the hope that it may benefit some young fancier who is thinking of taking up this branch of our hobby. I have been fortunate enough to breed quite a few crosses, including Redpoll-Bullie, Greenie-Bullie, Goldie-Bullie, Goldie-Greenie, Linnet-Canary, Goldie-Canary, Redpoll-Canary, and several others.

I have always used cage-moulted birds until last season when, being short of these, I decided to put up field-moulted pairs, with this result—seven Goldie-Bullies from one pair, five from another pair, same cross, and three Goldie-Greenies. These pairs were all young birds caught during the previous season, but I got them very steady and in good breeding condition, the two essentials.

To bring my birds up in condition I rely on watercress and young dandelion leaves. I get them just as they are shooting up through the earth, when they are full of juice, and there can be no doubt that they are a real good tonic and conditioner. As the season gets older I give plenty of shepherd's purse and other wild seeds.

A Useful Cage.

Here perhaps I had better give the dimensions and a description of the cages I use; they are Japanese camphor cases, 29 inches long, 20 inches high, and 15 inches deep. The perches, three, I put level with the top of the bottom rail, and only the middle of the front is open wire. The centre panel, 17 inches long, is wire netting of half-inch mesh, and the space left at each end is boarded nearly half-way up with a door hinged to the side of the cage, the top portion being wire-netting. These doors ensure a considerable amount of privacy for the hen, and afford easy access to the nests when such is necessary.

For my British hens to nest in I use flower-pots half filled with garden mould and give nesting material to suit the species I am breeding with, as near as possible the same as they would use in their wild state. If the hen will not build I make the nest for her.

For the cage-bottom I use sawdust liberally, and when the hen is nesting I strew the bottom with dried grass to prevent the eggs from breaking if they are dropped from the perch, as is very often the case with British hens. For grit I use the ordinary cage-bird sand, mixing with it some old mortar well smashed up. If I get a hen laying soft-shelled eggs I add a little lime-water to the drinking water, and find this does the trick.

Canaries as Foster-Mothers.

For incubating the eggs hen Canaries are the best, as British hens are not reliable sitters. With each Canary I put a cock Finch, and get a round of Mules off before my Hybrid pairs are ready, and as young Mules are always saleable through CAGE BIRDS, this helps to pay the seed bill.

Now when my British hens have laid their clutch of eggs, I put them under the hen Canaries, and the Canaries' eggs I give to the British hens to play with and to keep them amused for a day or two.

As the Hybrids hatch off I give the hen Canary egg-food mixed with insectivorous food to feed her young, with plenty of cracked hemp and an abundance of shepherd's purse. I have reared all my Hybrids on this green food, and they have it as soon as they are hatched. When the young leave their foster parents I still give plenty of wild seeds and gradually wean them off the soft food, as there is no doubt a Hybrid cannot be got up to its proper colour without an abundance of natural food. I give them a good large flight so that they may take plenty of exercise as this develops the frame and shapes them up. In conclusion I would say to those who intend to take up Hybrid breeding, you will get many disappointments, but stick to it, and you will be rewarded.

My First Attempt at Mule Breeding.

By
J. A. P.

MY first attempt to breed mules was made in 1910. I was an absolute novice at bird keeping, but having seen a copy of CAGE BIRDS, I began to buy the paper regularly, and soon determined to try my prentice hand at mule-breeding.

During the Christmas Holidays I entered a bird shop to buy a Linnet. The proprietor called my attention to three Linnets in separate small cages, pointed out these as steady, house-moulted birds, and said they had been caught a year before when only a few weeks old. I bought the largest for half a crown, and it turned out a very good one. My advice to beginners who want steady, reliable Linnets is to buy two or three large young birds in their first feather, and then treat them as advised in the "Nutshell" on the Linnet.

About Christmastide, too, from a local fancier, I bought a crested hen Canary for which I paid three and sixpence. She was recommended to me as having bred mules the previous year, and was, to all appearance, in splendid health. Having carried this prize home, I had now my first pair.

A Breeding Pair for One and Ninepence.

In February I was told by a friend that he had a cock Greenfinch, which had been caged since November, and so I bought this bird, paying sixpence for it. The Greenie was big and steady, but dark in colour, and one that I would not keep for breeding now, as it seems foolish to breed with poor coloured Greenfinches when good birds can be obtained so easily and cheaply.

Of course I must find a wife for the Greenfinch too, and, as the breeding season was fast approaching, I hid me to a neighbouring town where I had found a dealer who kept a cage of "common Canaries." I bought a clear buff hen for the immense sum of one and threepence! You must understand I had been told by local Canary fanciers that mule breeding was a very difficult game to play, and I was not risking much on my initial experiments. Above all, don't laugh at my one and threepenny common hen, for she proved one of the best feeders I ever had. But of that anon.

I fed my birds separately. To the Linnet I gave canary, rape, teazle, and hemp, with an occasional titbit of linseed, niger, maw, and gold of pleasure; the Greenie received the above-mentioned stock mixture, with the addition of sunflower, of which he became extraordinarily fond. Both received a liberal supply of dandelion heads; it is surprising how early this plant blooms under sheltered banks.

Of course, like most beginners, I was very impatient to put the birds together, and in March fancied it was quite time something was done. I therefore "paired up" the birds. My word, what matrimonial struggles there were! The Greenfinch and the buff hen Canary were by far the worse in this respect, and I felt constrained to separate them for a time.

Matters Progressing.

Now let us follow the fortunes of the Linnet and Crested Canary. I allowed them to remain together, and the quarrelling grew less by degrees, until by the end of April they were on better terms, and the hen began to carry about a feather and some nesting material I had inserted in the cage. I therefore gave her a whole nest bag, and, to my delight, she began to build in earnest in her earthenware nest pan.

The Linnet was now on his best behaviour; he seemed very pleased when his mistress sat in the nest pan, and would hop in front of her (especially when he thought no one was about), and feed her with egg-food which I made from prepared yolk of egg. This pair seemed indeed a model couple, and I have never seen a better husband than that Linnet.

The nest built, the hen laid, and I allowed the Linnet to remain until the evening of the day when the second egg was laid, when I removed him for fear of accidents. The hen laid four eggs and sat well, but, to my dismay, none hatched out, and on breaking the shells I found all clear.

This was a disappointment, but, after a few days, I put the birds together again, and the same course was followed. I watched the birds very carefully, gave plenty of dandelion heads, groundsel, etc., and felt sure that better things must follow. In a sense I was right, but, alas, another bitter disappointment awaited me. On the very day before the eggs were due to hatch, the hen deserted them, and I found them quite cold. I left them a short time in order to be sure, but she did not return to the nest. On breaking the shells, what was my mortification to find that three eggs contained fully-formed young which must surely have seen the light the next day. Success had been so near and yet so far.

This very typical Chaffinch has won for its owner, Mr. F. A. Marriott, of Nutfield, 1st and 2 specials Wimbledon, 2nd Reading, 3rd Reading, and 3 firsts and 2 seconds Redhill, the only times shown.

Naturally I tried to discover a reason for my failure, and came to the conclusion that I ought not to have left the Linnet within hearing distance, but subsequent events told me that there must have been something wrong with the Canary's health, for I tried the pair a third time, and, to my sorrow, after laying only two eggs, she was found dead in the nest. I now think there must have been some internal trouble which had prevented her carrying out her maternal duties in full.

Now let us return to the other muling couple. After having separated the birds, I fed both carefully, giving the hen a good supply of prepared egg food with lettuce, groundsel, and chickweed. Now she began to show signs of readiness to mate, for she flew restlessly about the cage, and flapped her wings persistently. I therefore put the Greenfinch into her cage again, and once more several tussles took place, but on this occasion the birds soon settled down, though they were never on the same footing as the couple previously described.

An Escape and a Re-capture.

The hen then began to build, and Mr. Greenie tried to help in his clumsy way, but the hen seemed to consider that he was infringing her rights, and would sometimes alter things again when he put his finger (or rather his beak!) into the pie.

After the nest was finished, a day or two elapsed and no egg appeared, and the thought occurred to me that I might as well give the cage a good cleaning before operations proceeded further. I took out both birds and put them in a small travelling cage. The work was soon accomplished, and I hurried to return the birds, but in my haste, the Canary somehow escaped. I looked instinctively towards the windows and so apparently did the bird; one, alas! was open, and in a twinkling that hen was flying outside, while I watched her disappear in the garden of my neighbour on the left.

At first I was inclined to let her go, but on second thoughts determined to make an effort to retake her. I therefore went quietly along my garden, and, after a time, heard the familiar "tweet tweet" about twenty yards beyond my eastern boundary. I was proceeding in that direction when to my surprise the truant came flying into my own hedge comparatively near to me. A friend came to my help, and between us we managed to secure her, and soon carried her in triumph back to her husband. She seemed mightily pleased to be in her cage once more.

May I digress here to advise beginners to use false bottoms (or draw-outs), and cover them with a sheet of paper. Cleansing is then a simpler matter, and such contrivances as the above less likely. Above all, don't handle birds with your room windows open.

How the Linnet Spoilt Things.

The foregoing incident did not encourage my hopes, yet the hen laid next morning. I took out the egg and put in a dummy, chiefly because the Greenie seemed inclined to interfere with the nest. The hen laid three in all, and sat well without the presence of the Greenfinch. When she had been sitting about a week I happened to find a wild Linnet's nest with five eggs. The thought came to me that it would be a splendid thing to breed Linnets in a cage, and so I carried two eggs home, and put them into the Canary's nest, making five in all.

To my surprise, in four days I saw the hen feeding, and then guessed that one of the Linnet's eggs must have hatched. I let matters alone until the full fourteen days, when I found one young Linnet, one mule just hatched, and three clear eggs. I removed the eggs and all went well for a time, the hen feeding capitably until one day when the Linnet left the nest and a new difficulty arose—one indeed which I ought to have foreseen when I introduced eggs of unknown age. The young Greenie mule was a long way from leaving the nest, while the Linnet would not stay in it, but persisted in hopping about the cage floor and opening his beak for food. The mother seemed quite puzzled at this, and the consequence was that she gradually left off mothering the mule in order to look after the Linnet. By the time I realised this, however, the mule was too far gone, and it died soon afterwards. The young Linnet flourished, and was soon able to look after himself, though I was disappointed in him for he was small, and as wild as any field-caught specimen.

Success After All.

After the hen had rested for a week, she showed signs of nesting again, and once more I introduced Mr. Greenfinch. On this occasion things went smoothly, chiefly perhaps because I had learnt more, for nothing teaches like experience. The hen laid four eggs, and this time I introduced no outsiders. Three young ones hatched out, and to satisfy them the hen worked very hard, for three healthy mules can eat! They grew apace, and at about sixteen days were ready to leave the nest. I allowed them to remain much longer with the hen, as July was far advanced, and I thought it too late for another nest. There were two cocks, both dark, and one variegated hen, which was very pretty.

You see then that the season's work resulted in three Greenie mules. On the whole I was pleased with the result, and, above all, I had gained much valuable experience. I think I have set out my errors at least fairly fully; beginners may note and act accordingly.

A Tip for Breeders of Goldfinch Hybrids.

Writing in the "Avicultural Magazine" for February, Dr. A. G. Butler says "In disposition the Goldfinch is a restless bird, and he delights in picking things to pieces; if he cannot utilise this impulse in extracting the seeds of thistle, teazle, sow-thistle, or dandelion, it is well to provide him with millet sprays, or flowering grasses, which are an equal attraction. I think it is chiefly the lack of such means of employing his restlessness which induces a cock Goldfinch when confined in a small breeding cage to interfere with his wife's nest, and pierce her eggs. In a fair-sized flight-cage, where groundsel could be twisted in the wires at about a foot from the nest, I did not find the nest or eggs were interfered with."

The Canary's Song.

SIR.—The song of all birds is simply imitation, witness the Roller Canary, the Skylark, etc. I could give reams of matter proving this, the Rev. Soames will agree that man, too, is simply an imitation. We learn our mother tongue not from within, but from environment. Thus an Englishman born in France imitates only or mostly French sounds. Later in life he can feel himself unconsciously apeing others in articulation, gesture, or in extending his vocabulary. All is imitation, and so in birds.

Why Not a Sheffield Roller Society?

SIR.—As a regular reader of CAGE BIRDS, and also a lover of the Roller Canary, I cannot help noticing the absence of a Roller society in the city of Sheffield. I have seen the distinct success of the show birds' societies in the cutlery city, and what I want to know is why Sheffield has not a Roller society of its own. Are there enough fanciers to start one, and, if so, will they put their house in order and do so? It is three years since I was introduced to Mr. Jobson, of Penryn Road, and bought a cock and two hens from him. He remarked at the time that it was a pity Sheffield had not a Roller club. From that time my interest has never waned, but has increased, though I am still only a novice, never having seen a Roller show. My object in writing is to learn more, see more, and further the interest in the singing beauties, and I hope this will catch the eye of your Sheffield readers, so that they may air their views, get to work, and in due time have a Sheffield and District Roller Society. Thanking you for the many valuable hints gathered from CAGE BIRDS.

A Talented Budgerigar.

SIR.—I have had now for two years an aviary-bred Green Budgerigar, which I consider as good as many talking Parrots. Here are a few of his sayings, most of which he has learned from me: "Hello Joey." "Come on Joey." "Oh, he was a pretty boy." "Naughty Joey." "Come on then." "No mistake." "Don't be stupid." "Oh he was a Joey, Joey, Joey." "Wait a bit." "Oh its shocking." and often he muddles up a saying, like "Oh he was a naughty pretty Joey, Joey, Joey." Practically all these sayings I have taught him, but there is one he has got hold of, I don't know how, that is, "To be or not to be"; sometimes he turns it into "To be or was to be." How he got hold of this I don't understand, as I do not pretend to recite Shakespeare, and I have never said the sentence to him. I've tried him on such as "Good morning Joey" and "Good night," but up to now no response. Of course he is very tame, and comes on my finger, and runs up my arm, on to my shoulders, and whenever I enter the room he dodges up and down his perch until I go over and speak to him. Really it is wonderful to think a little bird, in body not much bigger than a Canary, can talk so well. Now please, believe what I have said. It is not like the "Story of the Parrot's operation" in this week's issue.

Egg Bread versus Eggs.

SIR.—In reply to "F. W. James" and "A Novice," I should like it to be understood that I do not use egg bread because it is superior to egg for rearing young, but because it answers quite well, saves the time of a busy man, and does not go sour if left for 24 hours. I have never made egg bread, so cannot give a recipe. I use a well-known egg bread which is to be purchased anywhere in 1d., 2d., 3d. packets and 6d. tins.

I am quite satisfied by experience that greenstuff is far more important in the successful rearing of Canaries than egg food. Keep a large bunch of green food always in the cage, and the birds will not quarrel about the nature or quality of the egg food. I have used stale sponge cake, sweet biscuits, and dried sweet cake with satisfactory results. Look at the neck of any young unfeathered bird after a meal, and you will notice that the bulk of the food swallowed is green food. Given plenty of green food, an occasional running short of egg food will not be noticed, but let the supply of green food run out and you will find some of the most reliable feeders give up the game.

There have been good recipes for egg bread in CAGE BIRDS, but I cannot recall the dates. Anyhow, your correspondent cannot do better than persuade his wife to make him a plain sweet cake with a couple of extra eggs. When cool dry it well in the oven (like a rusk), then grind it up and store in tins. But the commercial food is so cheap as to make it hardly worth while to bake one's own.

Colour in the Norwich Plainhead.

Its Origin and Its Importance.

SIR.—I am sure all Plainhead fanciers interested in colour will appreciate the valued contribution of Mr. T. Johnson, expressing as it does the views of several prominent northern fanciers; not the least interesting being that of Mr. J. Raynes. I would remind my friend, however, that did I wish to seriously pursue my interest in the matter of the Lizard blood, nothing he now submits in any way conclusively proves that Lizard blood in some degree may not be a responsible factor towards the realisation of rich colour.

However, whether it is so or not, my original article was penned as a matter of interest, and so far as I am aware there is no reason why the criticism arising therefrom should also not be of considerable interest, and, may-be, help.

A Bedford Fancier Writes from the Front.

SIR.—Just a line to express my pleasure in seeing on the front page of CAGE BIRDS of Jan. 8 some of our Bedford birds. Being a member of the society which organised the show, it gave me quite a thrill of joy to see our birds take such a prominent position in your paper. I have been in France for many months, and away from the birds, but I always look forward to the mail which brings me CAGE BIRDS. I wish all fanciers in Bedford a very successful breeding season, and hope to see some real good ones when I get home again. Sergt. CRAWFORD, A.S.C.

Catching Mice in a Birdroom.

SIR.—Having read with interest the various methods of catching mice, all of course with the same result, getting rid of them, I will with your permission endeavour to describe my simple method of exterminating this pest.

Get a piece of tin or slate, put on it some bird lime, and sprinkle with a little bird seed, and place on floor near hole, or under cages (having, of course, swept up all waste seed), and once a mouse sets his foot on it he is doomed.

The advantage of this method is that you can catch as many as half a dozen mice on a piece of tin 6 inches square. You will probably have to warm tin to get off mice, after which you can replace in room till all are exterminated.

T. RIDAL.

Larkhall Sec. Off to the Front.

SIR.—Resulting from my advertisements in CAGE BIRDS I have sold all my stock of British, Lancashire-Norwich crosses, and Borders except two pairs which are again advertised in this issue. I am very pleased to have had such a quick response, and wish their new owners every success. I am very sorry to leave the fancy at this, the best season of the year, when we all should be looking forward to breeding a champion, although our hopes may never be realised. Even then, it has been worth all the trouble, and we find consolation in the thought that we are one season nearer to it. Until the war is over I shall only be keeping in touch with the fancy through your paper, CAGE BIRDS, but I trust when I return from my Continental trip with Derby's Tours, and our country is again restored to peace, to take up the hobby of bird breeding, and also to take the same active part in the fancy as in the past.

ALAN THOMSON.

Proposed East Anglian Norwich Canary Association.

SIR.—It is gratifying to find that my suggestion in your issue of January 8 of the formation of a Norwich Plainhead Club for East Anglia has aroused interest in important quarters. I have received communications from Lynn favourable to a scheme of centralisation, and my proposition has been approved by many leading exhibitors with whom I have come in contact. In CAGE BIRDS of February 19 I am pleased to find a businesslike letter from Mr. C. G. Taylor on behalf of the Cambridge and County C.B.A., seeking definite information on certain points, and as far as I can I will indicate what those associated with me have in mind. I should, however, make it clear that I did not propose a federation of societies. My scheme would really mean the forming of a new society or club which would not be in competition with existing societies. On the other hand, it would, where possible, render them some assistance by giving patronage on the lines of other specialist clubs. Of course, this is all merely proposition, and what we want is for those interested to assist with practical suggestions which would help on the central idea.

The proposed club would be open to membership for fanciers in Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, and Cambridge. The main object in view is to raise the status of the Norwich Plainhead bred in this area. Shows could be held each season in these counties, but not necessarily in the same town two years in succession. Thus fanciers in all the leading centres would in turn have the opportunity of seeing the cream of Plainheads in East Anglia brought together on the show bench.

No financial liability would attach to any existing society, as the club we have in mind would be self-supporting. The rate of subscription would depend to a great extent on the number of members likely to be secured.

It is not possible at the moment to give names of officials, etc., promoting this scheme. My original letter was the outcome of the informal conversations with friends in Norwich. We have long felt that the East Anglian Norwich Plainhead does not make its true value in the market of the country, and that only by combination can it be brought to its proper level. To secure this combination the executive of the society must be composed of members from all parts of the area covered. As for headquarters I think Norwich is the proper and most convenient place.

I have covered the points raised by Mr. Taylor as definitely as I can at present, and hope that it will provide something tangible for his society to discuss, and that they will be able to assist in this matter.

The So-called "Trinidad Thrush" at Holborn Hall Show.

SIR.—Much injustice would be spared if judges always had the courage and knowledge to "wrong class" an exhibit.

I was not present at the recent Holborn Hall Show, otherwise I should have lodged an objection against the so-called "Trinidad Thrush" (a Mynah) competing in the A.O.S. class, instead of in the class provided for Mynahs, etc. Miss Barlow-Massicks, it appears, originally entered it in the Mynah class, No. 115, so that, apart from her singular nomenclature, she was not to blame for its winning under false colours in class 117. Whoever was responsible for its transference did a grave injustice, of course unwittingly, to other exhibits in the class. Most people have to abide by their entries, right or wrong. It seems rather extraordinary that a judge should not know the difference between a Starling and a Thrush!!

I frankly admit that I am a disappointed exhibitor. My own exhibit, an absolutely unique specimen, admitted by your reporter to be perhaps the rarest bird in the show, is deprived of its rightful position in the class, while a bird that according to the classification is ineligible to compete takes 1st and all specials! It is really most unfair. One can but protest under the circumstances, and I do so most heartily.

B. T. STEWART.

Bird Life in Salonica.

SIR.—Being a reader of CAGE BIRDS, I thought a few notes on bird life round here would interest your readers. On the hills and plains huge flocks of Rooks and Jackdaws settle, feed, and then take a short fly across the streams to continue their search for food. To be seen amongst this black mass are a smaller flock of Starlings, showing off their gorgeous array of colour.

Sometimes a Hawk hovers overhead, and then the sky is black with the moving birds. In the vicinity of the numerous gullies and streams grow brambles and long coarse grass. On approaching these, up flies a dozen or more of a kind of Bunting, which closely resembles a Corn Bunting. Gracefully pecking around the pools are Pied, Grey, and Yellow Wagtails. Once only a Kingfisher darted across the stream.

In the brambles Magpies are to be seen re-decorating their old nests. These birds seem to follow the flocks of sheep and goats which feed on the hills. Flitting here and there on a turf which overhangs a bank is a perky little Wren, hunting for insects. Acting much in the same manner are a couple of Blue-Tits. Where there is a homestead or small village several Chaffinches, mostly hens, are to be seen.

Huge flocks of Goldfinches are on the hills feeding on thistles, and in the gullies, pecking about for what I take to be a kind of ant. These Goldies are much larger than our own. During the severe frosts, which are very prevalent, one is able to get within arm's length of them, and then off they fly to a thistle near by.

Amongst the beds of holly which cover the hillsides, Linnets and Redpolls congregate in large numbers. With these birds mixes a kind of Lark, which roosts in thickets. It appears to be the same as an English Lark, but does not soar, though it utters a similar cry. Hunting round a rubbish heap, a Blackbird is occasionally seen. A Robin, the only one I have seen, was engaged in searching amongst the dead leaves underneath a bush on a path. A small number of Partridges find a preserve in a cotton field. Upon looking in the air on hearing a faint cry, one sees several flocks of Wild Geese, trying to keep the V-shaped figure. I hope these few notes will be of interest to fellow readers, and I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

The Disputed Thrush-Blackbird Hybrid.

SIR.—Writing in "The Bazaar, Exchange and Mart," Mr. Rosslyn Manning says: "I had looked forward interestedly to the opportunity of seeing these birds, whose appearance had already created considerable controversy in the fancy Press, and I must confess to a keen sense of disappointment now that I have done so. The only indication of the female parent, in so far as colour and markings go, lies in the somewhat indistinct markings on the breasts of all three; in department the smaller of the three (a hen probably) evinced occasionally the Blackbird's trick of drooping its wings and slightly elevating its tail. My own hope is that next autumn, when the birds have gone through their first adult moult, unmistakable Blackbird characteristics will appear, to convince the most sceptical of their genuineness. By the time mentioned it is reasonable to expect that there will be traces of Blackbird colouring on the bill, eye cere, and upper surface of the body."

Mr. Manning, in spite of his disappointment, appears to see signs of the genuineness of these birds, and many who have seen them will join in his hope that this genuineness will be undoubted after their adult moult. It is not to be expected that Mr. Robson will join in the hope expressed, for if, like negro babies, they turn black as they get older, Mr. Robson will have to stick to his last statement and say it is the food that has done it. He will, of course, never admit he has made a mistake.

ONE WHO HAS SEEN THEM.

A Kind-hearted Prize Winner.

SIR.—I read in CAGE BIRDS with great pleasure that I have had the good fortune to be chosen one of the prize winners in the painting competition. The information that the average of quality of the competing drawings was so high as to make selection for the prize difficult enhances the value of the compliment.

Ever since I first began to take in CAGE BIRDS regularly I have admired the excellent drawings of birds which appear weekly on the front page, and I have learnt much from studying the coloured pictures also. Competitions of this kind are very useful in training the eye to observe the details of form and plumage in a way that fixes them on the memory, and the competing for this prize has certainly been to me both a pleasure and a profit in the information it has given me of the details of birds' colouring, etc., facts mostly gathered from your paper or books recommended in it.

The description you have given of the sketch sent in to the competition by Private Hodgson from the trenches is only one more proof of what is being proved daily, the imperturbable spirits of our boys out in those appalling trenches. I think, therefore, that everyone will feel the justice of the request I am about to make, namely, that my portion of the prize should be awarded to him on the merits of his sketch as a fine example of endurance and defiance of desperate circumstances. If this could be permitted it would certainly please me, and might bring him a little amusement and relief from the tedium of his life out there.

DORA SULMAN.

[While thanking the writer of the above for her kindly expressed appreciation, and for her generosity in apportioning her prize to our soldier competitor, we think it better for Miss Sulman to use the money in buying, through one of the existing organisations, such comforts as she may choose, and to despatch the parcel herself. The full address is Private Hodgson, 2705, B Company, 5th Border Regt., British Expeditionary Forces.—Editor CAGE BIRDS.]

Club Reports.

WEST STANLEY C.B.S.

Meeting Jan. 29, Mr. R. Callaway chair. Mr. C. Mitchell, Burnhope, was elected a member. Table show next meeting, Mar. 4, for British. Classes, Linnet, Greenf., Goldf. or Buff., Redpoll, and A.O.V. Mr. J. W. Robson, Burnhope, judge. Entry 5d. per cage. Birds staged at 6 at Commercial Hotel.—W. Cresswell, Sec.

W. STANLEY (Patriotic) F.F. & C.

Meeting, Feb. 13, R. Peart, chair, and a splendid turn up of fanciers, which is very gratifying. W. Platou was elected hon. treas. Stewards elected for cage birds were: S. Chaytor, H. Roxborough, J. G. Sanderson, T. Henderson, T. Nicholson, R. Mitchell. Decided that all exhibitors leave the room when they have staged their birds.—R. Hutchinson.

EDINBURGH O.S.

Meeting Buchanan's Hotel, on Feb. 19, Mr. John Dalgety, President, chair. Arrangements for joint show with Western were gone into. Buccleuch Parish Church Halls again agreed to. Messrs. T. Cant, P. Bain, A. Sheils were admitted members. It is hoped that all old members will again turn up this season and make a successful society. Next meeting April.—A. Weston, Sec.

LARKHALL C.B.A.

Meeting Y.M.C.A. hall, Feb. 19, after the table show, when some splendid exhibits were staged. Mr. R. Perrie winning special for most points; decided to hold pair show Mar. 4. Classes: Nor. yell. ck. and buff hen, buff ck. and yell. hen; Bord., ditto, A.O.V. Can., Yorks., Mule, Hyb. with Buff., A.O.V. Hyb. For.; sp by Mr. Perrie best pair Nor., Mr. Gibb best pair Bord., Mr. Campbell most commends. Judging at 5. Large turn-out requested.—Thos. J. McGregor, Sec.

SWANSEA C.B.A.

The following members were elected as officers for the year 1916: Hon. Pres., R. H. Sampson; Pres., J. H. Ford; Vice, E. P. Hoddinott; Committee, J. W. Ford, E. M. Evans, A. Richards, T. Holborrow, M. Glover, J. H. Richards, H. Fry, C. Jones, W. Mabbett, J. Slee, H. Sherratt; Show Managers, Messrs. Phil Jenkins and J. E. Jeffreys; Secs., Messrs. D. P. Rees and Alf. Hitchings. Decided to continue the table shows. The first will take place Feb. 26. Classification, Goldfinches, F.M., H.M., Linnet, ditto. Judging to commence at 7. Judge, Mr. Phil Jenkins.—D. P. Rees, Sec.

BARNSTAPLE C.B.S.

General meeting committee room, 59, High-street, Feb. 10; a fairly representative gathering. Mr. E. Collins chair. The principal business was the adoption of the rules as drafted in committee, and a discussion on holding a pair show. Decided to have a pair show, followed by a judging competition, at the Exhibition Hall, 59, High-street, Dec. 26, open judging to commence at 4. Mr. E. Collins was elected final judge. Three money prizes to the three nearest to his awards. Entrance to the show free; 3d. entry for the competition. A hearty welcome will be given to fanciers in the district, and it is hoped that all lovers of birds will join the society and so help the Fancy generally.—Charles F. Dart, Hon. Sec.

GREENOCK, PORT GLASGOW AND GOUROCK C.B.

Meeting Feb. 16, Shepherd's Hall, Cathcart Street, Mr. D. Molloy, Pres., chair, and a good attendance. Eleven new members were admitted, which is very encouraging for the start of the new season. Messrs. M. E. Campbell and Allison gave a report of the exhibition held by the club in Gourock, showing the total proceeds to be £12 1s. 8d., which was handed over to the Red Cross funds. The Club desires to thank all the friends who helped to make it such a success. Next meeting Mar. 1, will be the general meeting and election of new office bearers, so we hope to see every member turn out.—J. Mc G. Dooley, Sec.

BRECHIN C.B.S.

Annual general meeting, Dec. 15. Balance sheet for the past show was read by Sec., which showed a deficit of £2 2s., which, seeing that the show was held for a patriotic purpose, was very much to be regretted. Decided to take £1 from the Society funds, and a collection from members present amounted to 13s., which made a total of £1 13s., which Sec. was instructed to hand over to the local Red Cross Fund. We were also in the unhappy position of losing all our trophies, all three being won outright. Show date for 1916 provisionally fixed for Oct. 7, four weeks in advance of previous years, the object being to try and get more support from outside fanciers. Our show for some years past has been three-fourths local entry, which is unfair to us, considering the way Brechin fanciers turn out to other shows.—J. Crabbe, Sec.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY.

General meeting Porth Hotel, Feb. 16. Chair, T. James. A notice of motion brought forward from last meeting to rescind rule 7 afterwards fell through. Decided to have table show Feb. 23, Mr. J. Challenger judge. Mr. T. James offered a special for Norwich and Mr. T. Emanuel one for Yorks. Also two young bird shows, June 8 and July 27. Decided to give a gratuity to cellerman at headquarters for his services at pair show, also to change headquarters owing to failing to have the room in time for meetings. After a vote between the Llwynelcyon or Imperial Llwynelcyon was selected, and T. Emanuel and A. Long appointed to see Miss Williams about a room for the Society and report at next meeting. We shall be pleased to see all members turn up to draw out schedule for our young bird show.—J. H. Bevan.

MANCHESTER AND N.C.O.S.

Well attended meeting, Deansgate Hotel, Feb. 6. Members unanimously elected Mr. W. E. Kearns, the well-known exhibitor of Yorkshires, to fill the important office of President. A letter was read from Mr. Barker Clez stating that owing to a previous engagement he would not be able to judge the Table Show of pairs at next meeting, Feb. 20. Mr. E. Dooley was elected in his place. Members please note it is not necessary to wash their exhibits, as they will be judged purely on their merits as "ideal pairs" for breeding purposes. Also birds may be staged in one cage, or separate. The desirability of changing one of our meeting nights from Monday to Wednesday is to be considered at next meeting, and it is hoped that members affected will forward their views to the Sec. if they are unable to attend. Our Treas., Mr. Brown, intimated that owing to a serious breakdown in health he felt it imperative to resign his office. His resignation was accepted with regret, and a successor will be elected next meeting. Prize money was paid in connection with the January Show, also prize cards given out. Members kindly return ticket money as early as possible.—J. Green, Pres. Sec.

STOKE-ON-TRENT C.B.A.

Smoking concert and distribution of prizes, head-quarters, Feb. 7, Mr. Pitchford chair, and a good attendance. An excellent programme which was thoroughly appreciated was contributed to by Mr. Fox (songs), Miss Borby (piano-forte solos), Mr. Pitchford (solos), Mr. E. Ousman (dialact reading), Mr. Jones (solos), Mr. Bowers (humorous songs). All the solos were tastefully rendered, and Miss Borby proved an able accompanist. Special mention should be made of Mr. Bowers, who proved to be the humorist of the evening, his humour being of the unconscious variety, which is generally appreciated. Winners of the specials: N. Leese, gold medal best unfigured Nor. bred by a member; specials for the four highest birds over 2 shows, Leese and Hartley; whiskey specials, Leese, Bagshaw, Davies, Critchlow, Glover, Bowers and Hartley.—F. Glover, Hon. Sec.

BOSCOMBE F.A.

Meeting, Feb. 8, Dolphin Hotel, Holdenhurst Rd. Our last two members' shows were voted huge successes, especially the financial part of same, which enabled us to clear all debt of our open show three seasons ago and leave a balance in hand. Sec. was asked to enquire about Curzon Hall, and write Mr. Robson to judge our next show in Nov. The subs. is 3/- per annum, payable in advance. No entrance fee. Since the meeting we have enrolled six new members, and there is room for more. We cordially invite fanciers or intending members to come to our meetings. If those wishing to become members will send name and address I will give them any information they require. Several Winton fanciers have signified their intention to join. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the sec. for the work he had done in respect to the last two shows, also to Mr. Stone for so kindly getting the room ready.—E. T. Hames, Hon. Sec., "Fairholme," 30, South Road, Bournemouth.

WIGAN ROLLER CLUB.

Meeting Feb. 19, headquarters, Legs of Man Hotel. Officers elected for 1916: Pres., Mr. J. Tomlinson; chair, Mr. T. Kay; vice-pres., Messrs. Whittaker, Smith, Mather, and Barnett; Messrs. Greenall and Unsworth joint secs; M. Preston and R. Dickenson auditors. Unanimous that we hold our annual contest Dec. 15 and 16. New members elected: Messrs. J. Farrimond, J. Aspinall, W. Smith, H. Radcliffe, T. Barton, Norcott, Hutton, Eccleston, making full total of members 34. All are unanimous in the Roller fancy being governed by a control board. Next Sat., Feb. 26, at 6.30, a lecture on the song of the Roller Canary will be given by Messrs. Massey and Kilshaw, judges of Bolton, who will describe the various rolls, tours, faults, etc. A few birds will be present. Questions invited. Members, friends, and all interested in the Roller fancy will be given a hearty welcome.—P. Greenall.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

Meeting Crown Hotel, Station Street, Feb. 2, Mr. Broadhurst chair, and a very good gathering. New members elected: Messrs. Chatwin, Sparkes, Prottery, Tonks, and Dr. Askey Wood. Nominated: Messrs. Parkes, Woodhouse, Clarke, Westwood, Jones, Millward, Lapland, Haynes, Herbert, Cannon, and Baker, a splendid start for the New Year. Fanciers wishing to join us kindly send your names in by any member, or to sec. Officers elected: President, J. A. Eckersley; vice-presidents, W. W. Butler, A. J. Smith, J. Webb, H. C. Wilkins, E. Fordred, Messrs. A. Broadhurst, J. H. de Nalliet, P. T. Wells, G. A. Smith, F. Dipple, H. G. Hill, P. T. Cowley, H. T. Collier; treas., Messrs. Allen and Collier; auditors, Messrs. Clay and Cowley; Committee, Messrs. Derry, Fessey, Raby, Jones, Burke, Bastock, Ward, Healey, Wharton; sec., A. C. Shirley; sub. sec. for Roller section, A. Taylor. Will members rally round next Wednesday, Mar. 1, at 7.30 several Roller members having promised to bring birds for the benefit of the novice. Balance sheet to be presented.—A. C. Shirley.

G. RIFF C.B.S.

Meeting held Maskell's Hotel, Feb. 17. Mr. Whetton presided, and the meeting was well attended. A long discussion took place re the sending of parcels to the prisoners of war in Germany, and it was agreed that the Committee meet on Feb. 25 to deal with same. Resolved to hold a table show of British at next meeting, the annual general meeting, when I trust all members will make an effort to attend. Classes, Goldfinches, Linnets. Mr. E. J. Banks promised 2s. 6d. for best bird; Mr. H. C. Smith judge. Mr. Donovan was enrolled a member. A successful table show of Norwich was held. Result of the judging competition will be made known at next meeting. Nominations for officers for 1916, to be elected at next meeting: Chairman, Mr. Banks and Mr. Braille; vice-chairmen, Messrs. H. C. Smith, P. Braille, S. P. Whetton, and E. James; treas. and asst. sec., Mr. A. Ball; sec., Mr. E. Thomas; Committee, H. C. Smith, E. James, D. Raymond, J. Wiseman, J. Pearce, F. Howard, P. Braille, E. J. Davies, Rev. C. B. Jolliffe, E. J. Banks, S. P. Whetton, D. J. Lewis. Members please send their contributions, as I have to get my books audited and present balance sheet at next meeting. Mr. H. C. Smith and Mr. A. Ball are auditors.—E. Thomas, Sec.

CAMBRIDGE & COUNTY C.B.A.

Annual meeting, Prince of Wales Hotel, Jan. 20, Mr. G. Bishop presiding. The hon. sec. presented the balance sheet showing a balance in hand of £3 16s. 6d. This was adopted. Officers elected:—Chair, Mr. G. Bishop; vice-chair, Mr. P. Stiles; hon. sec. and treas., Mr. W. Ridgeon; asst. hon. sec., Mr. C. G. Taylor; committee, Messrs. J. Henderson, A. Bye, J. B. Baigh, A. Hills, A. R. Kent, G. Langley, A. Manning, E. W. Nichols, J. H. Pope, E. Ridgwell, and C. G. Williams; auditors, Messrs. A. Edwards and McQuarrie. A discussion took place with regard to the proposed East Anglian Federation of Norwich Pinnerhead Clubs, and sec. was instructed to obtain further information as to the regulations and proposed affiliation fee. The question of an inter-show with the Bedford C.B.S. was discussed, and it was left to the sec. and committee to ascertain the views of the Bedford Society in the matter. The N.P. show was fixed for second Thursday in July. Prior to meeting a table show was held. Messrs. Lambert and Williams judged. Nor. Ck.: 1, Nichols. Hen: 1, Nichols; 2, High. WALTON, EVERTON C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, Feb. 9, Mr. G. Holmes chair; good attendance. An interesting exhibition was drawn up for the remainder of year. Table show for British next meeting, Mar. 8, and lecture by Mr. J. W. Metcalfe on "Preparing for the Breeding Season," to be followed by a general discussion. Members please turn up in full strength.—A. G. Hunt.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, preceded by a committee meeting. Mr. P. Johnston read a most interesting and instructive paper on "Line Breeding." Some most remarkable points arose, and several remarks gave the audience much food for thought. The lecturer quoted several instances of well known exhibitors who always head the classes, but who, although possessed of such excellent specimens, never breed a really good specimen. Their winning birds are bought; invariably they have been bred by breeders who work upon scientific lines. Why cannot possessors of the best show birds produce equally good ones? The lecturer then fully explained the necessity of careful selection of stock to perpetuate the good points possessed by original parents. Many questions arose, and a very entertaining evening came to a close with a hearty vote of thanks to lecturer, Messrs. Bell, Stokton and Thurlay elected members.—F. C. Knight.

VALE OF LEVEN C.B.C.

Meeting Village School, Alexandria, Feb. 8, Pres., W. G. Gillies, chair. Sec. intimated he had received nine specials for Canary pair show, also that Lord Inverclyde, Messrs. W. E. Gilmour, P. Denny, J. T. Cargill, J. N. Marshall, W. B. Gillies, and Dr. Cook had kindly given their honorary patronage to the club, and had helped by assisting the funds. Classes agreed for Mule and Hyb. Pair show: Goldf. and Can., Linnet and Can., Greenf. and Can., Siskin, Redpoll or Twite and Can., A.O.V. Brit. and Can., Bullfinch for hybridising except Canary Buff. A.O.V. for hybridising. After selection of judge, which will be announced on his acceptance, Messrs. Abrahams, Barker, Campbell, Gennail, and sec. kindly promised specials. The surprise of the evening was when sec. read out thirty-seven applications for membership, which were unanimously granted, amid great enthusiasm.—A. H. McLean.

WIMLETON C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, 6, The Broadway, Feb. 7, Mr. W. G. Heath presiding. The schedule of the pair show, Queen's Hall, Feb. 22, was submitted and revised, two classes being added. Thirteen special prizes were allocated, the donors being Messrs. Fankner, Charlie How, Aspinall's Enamel, Spillers and Bakers, W. G. Heath, G. Birch, H. W. Hobden and A. R. Gay. Cups, medals and prizes won at the Annual Show were given out. Chairman's trophy and "Thynne" cup for most points in Borders at Pair, Young Bird and Annual Show, Hadden; "Iversage" cup most points Yorks. classes at Annual Show, Smith; "Saunders" cup best unfigured Nor., Hutton; medal best Brit., Marriott, Nutfield; diploma for best birds in Champion and Novice classes, Miss M. Wright and Mr. C. Brown. Altogether about thirty special prizes were taken away by members, and a vote of thanks to the Chairman brought a most enjoyable meeting to a close.—G. Griffiths.

CITY OF BRISTOL C.B.S.

Meeting, February 2, four new members were enrolled, including one lady (Mrs. J. A. Davis). The sec. presented annual report and balance sheet, and was heartily congratulated upon the way in which he had brought this old society from being heavily in debt to a sound position, which speaks well for his first year of office. Decided to hold a matched pair show on March 1, points to count for a three-guinea special prize presented by a well-known local fancier for most points secured throughout the season from Mar. 1. There will also be a silver cup and medal for points in novice section, and it is hoped that local novices will avail themselves of this opportunity of competing for something worth winning. A hearty welcome is extended to all wishing to join; nomination fee 1/-; annual sub., 2/6. Officers elected: Chairman, Mr. Yorke; vice, Mr. Buckland; treas., Mr. Tristram; hon. sec., Mr. Withers; asst. sec., Mr. Davis; assisted by a very strong committee. The future outlook is indeed "Merry and Bright," notwithstanding the troublous times.—J. A. Davis, Asst. Sec., 4, Church Road, Bedminster, Bristol.

SOUTHERN NORWICH P.H.C.

Annual meeting, held at the Reindeer Hotel, Rye Lane, Peckham, Feb. 9. Present, Mr. J. R. Ramsden (chair), Messrs. Botell, Cole, Crabbe, Harris, Head, Hodder, Jay, Maclellan, Martin, Matthews, and Robson. Proposed and carried that the meeting be converted into a general annual meeting, within the meaning of Rule 5. Result of the voting for officers: Mr. E. Baker, Pres.; Mr. Ramsden, vice-pres.; Mr. Crabbe, Spillman, Crisp, Saunders, Curtis, Pretty, Hodder, and Granger; London Committee Messrs. Cole (who was afterwards elected Sec.), Hazel, Martin, Tomsett, Crawford, Harris, and Hodson; Provincial Committee, Messrs. Collings, Gill, Houghton, Rippon, Kilby, Midgley; Auditors, Messrs. Robson and Heath. Resolved that Rule 5 be altered to read: "The annual general meeting shall be held at the National Show, Crystal Palace, if possible, and if not, at some other suitable place to be chosen by the Committee." Resolved that Rule 6 be taken out, and the following substituted: "The officers of the club shall consist of a President, Vice-Presidents, Treasurer, two Auditors, Hon. Secretary, and a Committee of 12, six of whom shall reside within the London Postal District, and six in the provinces. The Secretary shall be elected by the Committee from their number. The Committee shall manage the general business of the society. Three shall form a quorum. The Secretary shall convene a special meeting of officers to allot patronage to shows and whenever else he shall deem necessary, and at such meeting five shall form a quorum." Decided that the following words be added to Rule 10: "In the event of the Committee being unable to obtain this classification they shall have power to reduce same." Decided to increase subscription to 3s. 6d. per annum. Mr. Matthews presented his accounts, which, he said, were ready for audit, showing a balance in hand of £1 2s. 6d. Some discussion took place as to arrears of subs., and it was decided that same were properly payable up to and including the year 1914, but that subs. received during 1915 should be credited for 1916. A vote of thanks to Mr. Matthews for past services was duly carried. Mr. Matthews, in reply, said that anything he had left undone was wholly in consequence of want of time, and promised to give the new secretary any information possible. A vote of thanks to the Chair concluded the meeting. I shall be glad if all members will kindly forward their subs. to me as soon as possible.—Frank Cole, Hon. Sec., 15, Melbourne Grove, East Dulwich, S.E. (Several Club Reports unavoidably held over.)

Queries Answered

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

GONE IN MOULT (H. A. B.).—You must first of all see that the bird is not exposed to direct cold draughts or sudden extremes of heat and cold. Then every second day for a fortnight or so, in addition to the staple diet give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle and broken groats. In an ounce of sherry dissolve half a drachm of ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine, add a teaspoonful of glycerine, and give 20 drops of this mixture in the drinking water two days in every three until the feathers cease dropping. With luck it should be ready to mate successfully about the beginning of April, but you should not mate it for at least two or three weeks after it has apparently quite recovered from the moulting.

BEST TIME FOR PAIRING (A New Beginner).—Taken all round, the first week in April will be the best time for pairing birds in an outdoor aviary provided the weather is favourable at that time. But if the weather is inclement and the immediate prospect unfavourable you will lose nothing by waiting a little longer, even until the middle of the month if necessary, in order to get them to start under favourable circumstances. This may appear to you very late, but the general tendency of the beginner is to start much too early, and it is rarely that any good comes of so doing.

A FAINT HEART (Beginner, Horsehay).—The cause of the bird fainting in the way you describe when its cage is brought down for cleaning or any other attention is extreme nervousness. It is not uncommon for such subjects to die instantly as the result of a slight shock which any normally constituted bird would merely "wink at." Judicious management, avoidance of any cause for fright, a gentle, quiet, and methodical manner in dealing with them, and endeavouring to win their confidence is all that can be done for such specimens. Medical treatment is of no use. Attend the bird regularly, talking or "tweeting" to it gently all the time, and always leave it a morsel of some tit-bit of green food, fruit, or a few grains of some specially favoured seed, so that it may gradually come to associate your visits with these dainties, and thus help it to overcome its nervousness. Do not handle it, neither when conscious nor when it is in the collapsed condition.

STILL DROPS FEATHERS (Shun).—Try what the following treatment will do for it in a month or so. In addition to the staple seed diet advised before, give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle and broken groats every third day, and on the intervening days give a morsel of banana and a pinch of maw seed first, and next add to the drinking water 20 drops of the mixture advised to "H. A. B." in this issue. Also make a little paste by well mixing on a hot plate a teaspoonful of pure honey, ditto of cod liver oil emulsion, as much chlorate of potash as will cover a shilling, and the same quantity of powdered grain of paradise, adding sufficient finely powdered bicarb while mixing to bring the mass to the consistency of soft cheese. When cold it will be a little harder, and may be cut into cubes to stick between the wires of the cage. Keep a cube stuck in the wires for the bird to peck at when it likes, renewing it as often as necessary for the next three or four weeks.

NORWICH MILING COCK (J. W.).—The only material difference between a Norwich miling cock and an ordinary Norwich cock is that the former is likely to be rather smaller, and possibly paler in colour owing to in-breeding if it comes of a light miling strain. There is no material difference in its song or its general habits. If the bird is, as you say, coming in breeding condition, flapping about the perches with overflowing energy, and yet shows no signs of coming in song, I should be very much inclined to doubt its sex. To stop the wheezing, see that it is not exposed to direct cold draughts nor sudden extremes of heat and cold, and every second day for a week or fortnight, as may seem necessary, add to its drinking water 20 drops of whisky and three of eucalyptus oil well shaken together.

SWELLING UNDER EYE (E.O.A.).—The swelling is doubtless a small abscess coming to a "head." Treat as follows for a fortnight. First make a decoction by placing six or eight camomile flowers in a teacup, filling with boiling water, cover, and allow to infuse beside the fire for an hour, then strain off the clear fluid, add half a teaspoonful of boric acid, and stir until dissolved. Then catch the bird and bathe the swelling for a few minutes morning and evening with a little of the liquid, using a little fresh liquid and a fresh desil of wool each time. If the swelling forms a "head" during this treatment prick it carefully with a clean needle, press out the contents, and then anoint it with a little boric acid ointment once a day until well, and stop the bathing after pricking. If treatment makes no impression on the substance then it is in all probability an encysted tumour which a veterinary could remove in a few moments, but I do not advise you to try to do so yourself.

A SLUGGISH YORKSHIRE (Novice, R.C.W.).—Continue your present staple dietary, and give in addition a small teaspoonful of egg food once a week only, and sprinkle it liberally with maw seed. On two other days in each week give separately half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle and broken groats, with just a slight sprinkling of mustard seed in the hulk. Omit the linseed altogether. On each of the remaining days give a morsel of some green food as soon as you can get it in a fit condition, and preferably dandelion. You will begin to find the latter now in sheltered corners. In the drinking water, every second day for a week add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and in the following week add instead to the water four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid.

SOFT MOULT (Norwich Novice).—Yes, the condition you describe is often known as "soft moult." You must first of all see that the birds are not exposed to constant and great changes of temperature, or damp, and that they are kept in a comfortable temperature, which, however, need not be a very high one. Offer the bath daily when the weather is sunny and mild. In addition to the staple diet give separately every third day for two or three weeks a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and sprinkled with soft sugar. A piece the size of a hazel nut for each bird will suffice. On the intervening days give first a morsel of banana and a pinch of maw seed, and next half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, broken groats and linseed. For green food give two leaves of dandelion daily as soon as you can find any. In the drinking water add six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel two days in every three until the feathers cease dropping. Quite possibly the birds will be ready for breeding by about the middle of April, but one cannot say definitely beforehand. You should not mate them until two or three weeks after they cease dropping feathers in any case.

SWELLING OF VENT (W.G.T.).—You ought to have repeated full particulars as to the symptoms. However, even if the improvement is only slight it is better than none at all, and you may, after the bird has had a week's rest from all treatment, repeat the same treatment for another fortnight, then give it another week's rest, and again repeat the same treatment for a fortnight, thus making three fortnightly courses in all. In addition to this treatment you may during the next fortnight try the effect of bathing the swelling for a few minutes every third day with a solution of witch hazel—a teaspoonful of the extract in a saucerful of warm water—applied by holding a small swab of cotton wool well charged with the solution on the place, and every now and again recharging it in the saucer in order to maintain the warmth and freshness, continuing thus for a few minutes, then squeeze the wool dry and absorb the moisture from the skin and surrounding plumage with it as far as possible. This will enable you to avoid unnecessary wetting of the plumage.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

TROUBLE IN REARING (Bob, Duxley).—I am sorry to hear you did not succeed in your efforts to breed mules. I would certainly advise you to have another try this season. Of course, there is such a thing as a bad feeding hen, but I do not think you managed her in quite the best way. When you found she would not take the food you offered (and my experience is that very few hens will take the particular kind you gave her) you should have tried her with something different. The majority of Canary and mule breeders use hard-boiled egg, mixed with three or four times its bulk of biscuit, the whole being thoroughly mixed; but young ones can be reared on almost any kind of soft food, including bread and milk, providing the hens like it and have been occasionally fed on it before the young ones arrive. There is a brand of food made by the same firm that you mention without the oil in it. If this is mixed with hot milk or water and a pinch of salt or sugar added, most birds will eat it readily. Have another try, and watch these pages for any information that may be useful to you.

AVIARY BREEDING (Effen).—Your aviary is not large enough to contain the birds you mention with any hope of being successful in breeding with them. If you have about three pairs in it you will have a much better chance; you might possibly leave in the Canaries, a pair of Goldfinches and a pair of Linnets. You must fix up plenty of nesting places, such as small wicker cages, nest pans and boxes, or even four inch flower pots. These should be distributed about in cosy corners. Supply the birds with plenty of moss, short lengths of grass, cow hair, etc., to build with. Your other birds had better be kept in cages, but it is very doubtful if they will make any attempt at nesting under such confined conditions.

KEEPING AND FEEDING SOFTBILLS (Tit).—You do not quote correctly from Nutshell No. 25, but the difference is not great. The mixture you mention would do well as a stock food, but you must use very little crissel, and what you do use should be finely ground and thoroughly soaked before it is mixed with the other ingredients. In addition to this they should be given a few tit-bits such as a morsel of soft cheese, mutton suet, or even a cube of bread dipped in milk. The Tits will also eat several kinds of nuts, a few grains of hemp and sunflower. (2) No, it is not safe to put them in with other small birds. (3) If you tried to keep a Robin and Tits in a small aviary I fear you would not keep them very long; they are not at all desirable companions.

FEEDING A CHOUGH (W. Bolam).—I think your best way to procure a Chough would be to advertise for one in this paper. I am sorry I cannot give you the price, they are somewhat rare, and therefore not cheap. They will require to be fed upon soft food and insects, black-beetles, gentles, worms, mealworms, etc. I would advise you to get our Nutshell booklet No. 26. It deals with the feeding of all the larger insectivorous birds, and would assist you considerably.

CHAFFINCH NOT SINGING (E. Goodwin).—You should have sent me more information about your bird, something about his treatment and feeding, for I expect that is the cause of his not singing, although it is quite early enough for them; many birds in a wild state are not in song yet. A little soaked seeds and a mealworm or two will generally help them along. As regards general treatment why not procure our little book on the Chaffinch, 2d. post free from this office? It gives you in detail just the information you require.

THRUSH DOING BADLY (Bolton).—Your Thrush requires a change of treatment, and I do not quite approve of the place you are keeping him. An ordinary kitchen is far too warm for such a hardy species; besides, if I understand your letter rightly, he is hung above the gas, whereas if obliged to be in the kitchen he certainly should be placed below the gas. Have you examined the bird for insects? If not, please do so; and if he has any get rid of them as soon as possible; then give him an aperient, such as Epsom or Glauber salts, as much as will cover a shilling, in two tablespoonfuls of water. Let him have it for about six hours and then remove, giving him another dose a couple of days later. Discontinue the good you are giving him now and make up the mixture as advised on page 4 in the Nutshell booklet you have, or buy some ready made as used for small warblers, mix it with scraped raw carrot, or boiled potatoes for a change. Just smear the bare places with a little fresh lard or pure vaseline. Continue the insects and give occasionally a little fruit. With this treatment he should improve.

GOLDFINCH-CANARY CROSS (Peter Grant).—(1) There is seldom any trouble in breeding with a wild caught Goldie. Get him as steady as you can; he may tame considerably before you are really to put him up. (2) I would advise you to get a Norwich Canary hen if possible, the mules are generally good in shape and capital songsters. (3) Put the two birds in a two-compartment breeding cage, one in each compartment, and when they are both fit draw the slide and give them a nest-pan and building materials. As regards food, feed in the ordinary way with the addition of a spoonful of egg food twice a week, and a dandelion leaf or the seeding pods, if either of them are at all backward.

MOVING BIRD TO COLD ROOM (E. J. Holliday).—You did not send your address. It is contrary to our rules to answer questions without this, but as you might injure your birds if I did not, I proceed to do so. Perhaps you will send it to us on a post card. It requires a good deal of care and management to move birds from a heated room to a cold one without throwing them into a moult. Select from your stock all the healthiest, and those in the best condition, and when a spell of mild weather is on remove these birds to the room you intend keeping them in. This should be done early in the morning, before their present room is heated. For a few nights they should be covered up with cloths. Their food at this time should be slightly richer than usual, and should include a little egg food and maw seed. Feed up any remaining in the warm room and remove them, when ready.

SEVERAL QUERIES (Green Novice).—(1) "Jonque" is a term that has gone somewhat out of fashion, and really means yellow, as being the opposite colour to buff in birds. This is very pronounced in Canaries and mules, but not so evident in British birds, although it does exist. (2) Unflighted is a term applied to young birds that have not moulted their wing feathers. It means a bird that has only passed through its first moult. (3) There is no Nutshell booklet dealing with Buntings. (4) The Buntings are not softbills, although they will consume a small proportion of soft food. As a staple diet they require canary seed only; see that it is of good quality. Occasionally supply a few groats, rape, cracked hemp, maw, and a spoonful of wild seed mixture, which you can purchase in packets from any respectable corn merchants or bird dealers. (5) For information upon this subject you had better apply at your nearest police station, as the restrictions do not apply equally to every county. In most of them the season closes at the end of February.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

WILL COW-BIRDS NEST? (Cow-bird).—(1 and 2) It is difficult to give you a helpful answer, as you do not tell me what kind of Cow-birds yours are; much depends upon this, as some of these interesting birds are parasitic, i.e., have similar nesting habits to the Cuckoo. The Silky Cowbird is parasitic, and I suspect yours are of this species. The cock bird is uniform glossy blue-black, the hen uniform earthy-brown. I fear there is no chance of their nesting either in your Budgie aviary or in a breeding-cage. They have never yet bred with me, though kept in a large natural aviary with many other species, though on one occasion they did get as far as eggs. If they should be Flame-shouldered Troupials or Cowbirds then they should nest in a roomy natural aviary, but when young were hatched they would require a constant supply of live insects and their larvae, e.g., mealworms, wasps' grubs, ants' eggs, gentles, beetles, spiders, smooth caterpillars, etc. (3) They will build a Thrush-like nest amid the branches, or you could fasten in the branches a deserted Thrush or Blackbird's nest. (4) Seed (what you give Budgies would do), ripe fruit, insecticide mixture (soft food), and live insects. (5) There is no Nutshell on Cowbirds, but in Foreign Birds for Beginners (1s. 2d. post free, from our manager) there are chapters both on the Silky and Ruddy (Flame) shouldered Cowbirds.

FOR GREENHOUSE AVIARY. (Mainman).—If your birds are to do well you must secure free ventilation without draught, yet sufficient to eliminate damp. Also you should screw boards across the sash bars (on the inside) over the top of aviary to keep the sun from striking directly down into the aviary; they will get ample sun and light from the front and sides. Cover the back wall thickly with twigg branches for the birds to climb about, and also for perching accommodation. You must not attempt to mix Parakeets and Finches, and as you have a pair of Budgerigars you had better get a pair of Cockatiels. Your aviary is sufficiently stocked. With their breeding as soon as they have properly settled down it will be overcrowded while young are being reared. You ought not at any time to have more than twelve birds therein, so this will mean parting with most of the young as soon as they can fend for themselves.

SEEDS FOR GREY PARROT (H. Gray).—Young Greys are usually of much darker plumage than when fully adult; also there is the variation of depth of colour common to all species, which usually has at the most only local significance. Some Greys have red feathers scattered among the body plumage, and I have seen one specimen which was almost regularly spangled red. Greys with red mingled with the grey body plumage are termed by the dealers "King Greys." It would be better with a more varied seed diet, even if you only added white oats and safflower, the latter is often called by corn chandlers "small sunflower." It should also have fruit, nuts, pieces of biscuit and plain cake. The "Grey Parrot" Nutshell, 2d. post free from our manager, would help you.

NIGHTINGALES AND MOCKING BIRDS (Anxious).—You must repeat query as to treatment, etc., of the Nightingale to our British Bird Expert, Mr. H. Norman, as it is outside my province. I can only say that insectivorous birds ought not to be kept by anyone until they have first thoroughly acquainted themselves with what such birds require. You could get a Nutshell on the Nightingale from our manager. The Virginian Cardinal is not a Nightingale, and though it has a very pleasing and melodious song during the breeding season, it is not of sufficient merit to win it the name of Nightingale. It is very silent as a cage-bird. I am only acquainted with the Mocking Bird (I allude to the Common American Mocking Bird, Mimus polyglottus) as an aviary bird. A good one is a marvel, indeed, and runs our "Queen of Songsters" very close, even if it does not fully rival it. It moreover has the merit of pouring out its melody by day. A good one is an "orchestra." Most of them, however, that I have come across have not held good reputations as cage-bird songsters. Of course, with all there is the variation of merit of individual performers.

WHAT BIRD (Novice, Blackburn).—I cannot give you a definite answer at present, as I am changing my residence, and my library is packed, and will not, I fear, be available for a couple of weeks. Kindly make me a rough diagrammatic sketch of the bird and give approximate measurements of body and tail, and repeat query in about a fortnight's time, when I will try and definitely name it for you. It is, however, pretty safe to say that it is either some species of Scimitar Babbler, or one of the Deprandis; of the latter the Mamo is a representative.

BUDGERIGARS COMMUNICATING DISEASE (J. Scott).—I do not hold with the habit of offering or permitting birds to take food from between the lips. The risk from keeping birds and letting them is practically nil, and under the conditions you keep yours there is no risk at all. As regards the statement of your acquaintance, one hesitates to give a flat denial, yet I know of no properly authenticated case having occurred. Only the dicta of qualified medical men after scientific examination could be accepted in such cases. It is more than probable that local conditions might infect birds and humans alike, and that only would be the significance of the simultaneous occurrence.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

British Birds and the Wild Birds' Acts (H. and Son).—Nothing in the Wild Birds' Acts would compel either a dealer or a bird-keeper to give up keeping birds during the close season. What he is prohibited from doing is to take or have in his possession during the close season any wild bird named in the schedule of the Act of 1880, or in the additional schedules issued from time to time by local authorities, which has been "recently taken." This answers also your second question, for no one is allowed to take any scheduled wild bird during the close season. "Small dealers with British bird aviaries are affected by the Act only as here stated. If they are in possession of British birds during the close season, they must be able to prove either that such birds were taken or bought or received before the close season started, or that they were bought or received from some person residing out of the United Kingdom.

Insuring Birds against Bombs (A Reader).—There is a Government scheme for insurance against air-raids, and you could obtain particulars as to this from your local post office. You could also get full information as to premiums for any kind of insurance if you were to write to Mr. R. J. Dartnall, General Buildings, Aldwych, London, W.C. You did not send your name and address with your query. Please see our rule.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Miss M. Stainland.—Hen bird, death resulted from cerebral haemorrhage, probably induced by a fit. Mr. F. Kemp.—Inflammation of the bowels. The bird was in very poor condition; it had probably been ailing longer than you were aware of, but even then its indisposition may not have been very appreciable.

Singing Contests.

Announcements of forthcoming contests in the nature of advertisements must be paid for at advertisement rates, three words a penny.

PONTEFRAC.

Linnets contest, Woodman Inn, Horsefair. Club sing, Feb. 19, 36 birds entered for 3 min. time singing: 1, B. Nelson; 2, Scotton; 3, Blackshear. Open sing, Feb. 20, 24 competed, 3 minutes' time singing: 1, 2, Piper; 3, Blackshear. Let us see if we can get a Roller contest up for the week-ends.—S. Pugh, Hon. Sec.

CASTLEFORD.

Contest George and Dragon; 58 birds entered 4 minutes' time sing. 1, R. Collinson, 116; 2, 3, S. Morley, 114 and 107. Feb. 20, 44 entered 3 minutes' sing. 1, J. Wainwright, 102; 2, J. Brindley, 70; 3, W. Nelson, 68. Inter-sing with the Leeds fanciers for time and quality first Sat. in Mar., Albion Hotel, Saville Green.—W. Dobson, Sec.

BARNESLEY.

Linnets contest, Dove Inn, Doncaster Road, Feb. 20, under an extra good company, for 4 min. time singing; 5 birds did above 3 min. in 4; we think this is extra good singing. Troop and Jones shared 1st, 3 min. 4th sec.; 3, Moore, 3.30; 4, Coles, 3.25; 5, Lowe, 3.10; 6, Hardman, 2.31. Rally up, outsiders, and get straight on books before special contest, which will be advertised in Cage Birds respecting the specials, etc. Shepherd, timer; Collins, chalk.—J. Hardman, Sec.

LEEDS.

Leeds Quality Linnet Club: Grand contest, Feb. 20, Plasterers' Arms, Skinner Lane; 20 birds faced the judges, A. Lorriem and H. Reeder. 1, Chippendale; 2, Dearlove; 3, Hargreaves.—P. Turner, Sec.

Open contest for quality Linnet singing, Clarence Hotel, Feb. 19; 16 birds sang. 1 and 2, Bins; 3, Wigfield. Judges, P. Madden and D. Madden, who is home on leave. Feb. 20, 15 birds sang. 1 and 3, Bins; 2, Ward. Judges, T. Summers and M. Lipman.—W. Lipman, Hon. Sec.

Leeds Linnet and Canary F.A., Albion Hotel, Saville Green, York-rd. Open contest for quality Linnet singing, Feb. 19; 41 birds sang. 1, J. Smith; 2, Butler; 3, Playforth; 4, Thompson; 5, Butler. Judges, Naylor, Crane, and Hayes. Roller contest Feb. 19; 10 sang. 1, T. Johnson; 2, Wharman; 3, Thompson; 4, Platts. Judges, Naylor and Hayes. Linnet contest Feb. 20; 19 sang. 1, J. Chippendale; 2, T. Johnson; 3, Sissons; 4, T. Ward. Judges, Hardesty, Naylor, Crane, and Linnet contest, Feb. 20; 13 sang. 1, J. Chippendale; 2, 3 shared T. Johnson and Stacey; 4, Walls. Judges, Hardesty, Naylor, Butler. Open contest for quality Linnet singing, Saturday next, Feb. 26. 1st prize copper kettle, entrance fee added. Also open contest for time and quality, first Saturday in March, combined Leeds and Castleford; first pair to be hung at 3 o'clock. (Advtd.)—W. Naylor, Hon. Sec.

A HANDY BOOK.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, and a leading Expert and Judge. Edited by G. E. Weston and C. A. House.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all are considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

A BIRD OF THE HEDGE-ROW.

The Blackbird is one of the most familiar birds of our country-side, loving to keep in the shelter of hedge-rows and low-growing bushes. It ranks very high among our British songsters, and accommodates itself readily to cage or aviary life. The fine specimen portrayed in our illustration is the property of Mr. John Frostick, of Streatham, and has won many prizes. In our next issue we shall tell all about the keeping of the Blackbird as a pet song-bird.

The BULL-DOG STRAIN

Champion Norwich and Yorkshires.

20/-, 30/-, 40/-, 50/- per Pair.

The above strain needs no bounce. Their winnings for the past few years are sufficient proof that there is no better blood in the fancy. They are still going strong, as will be seen on reference to the reports of the leading shows. I am now offering birds bred from this strain at 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 20/-, 25/-, 30/-, 40/- each. Matched Breeding Pairs, 20/-, 30/-, 40/-, 50/- per pair upwards.

I have also a few good birds bred from other well-known strains at following prices:—Smart Thick-set Norwich Cocks, 8/6, 10/- each. Good Cobby Hens, 7/6, 8/6, 10/- each. Matched Breeding Pairs, 15/-, 17/6, 20/- per pair.

Grand lengthy Yorkshires; single birds or in pairs at same prices as Norwich.

CRESTBREDs.—I have a few exceptionally good Crestbred cocks, large massive birds, with plenty of feather and good broad heads, at 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 20/- each.

Songsters! Songsters!! Songsters!!! Champion song cocks, in full free song, 8/6, 10/6 each. Sure to please. Approval anywhere.

Hens! Hens!! Hens!!! If you want a few spare hens in any variety, I can please you. Write stating wants. Sib Hens for Muling, 5/-, 6/-, 7/6, 10/- each. ...

TERMS.—Cash or deposit with Editor. (See also my Special Advt. under Yorkshires).

Travelling Cages 3d. extra in all cases.

Remember This, Please.—I invite you to come on any day but Sunday and inspect my stock, and make your own selection. If unable to come, I am prepared to send any number of birds to any address in the Kingdom on 10 days' approval at my sole risk. I guarantee absolute satisfaction to every customer, or cash returned in full. Send a P.C. for my Free Illustrated Catalogue.

BY ONE WHO KNOWS.

Feb., 1916. "Pair of Norwich arrived. They are well matched. This is my first transaction with you, but it won't be the last, as you are very fair in your prices, and I must say you give better value than any others—they are not in it—and I have had a good deal of experience in purchasing."—W. A. to W. Rudd.
[I might here say that the above refers to a pair, the price of one of the birds was 60/-, hence it will be seen that the writer is no novice.

BREED YOUR OWN WINNERS.

THERE is no more lovely seed-eater than the popular Gouldian Finch, which, however, is very difficult to establish. This trouble can be overcome, and the variety kept successfully. But you must follow the hints given in "Nutshell No. 14," from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C., post free for 2d. From agents (see list frequently published).

AVADAVATS! Avadavats are very charming little birds, but they need care. The "Nutshell" booklet, "Avadavats," contains full information on the management of these birds. You cannot do better than have a copy by you, and we shall be pleased to forward same upon receipt of 2d. Write, The Publisher, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Twitterings.

In the report last week of the Southern Norwich Plainhead meeting, the address of Mr. F. Cole (hon. sec.) was given at 15, Melbourn Grove, East Dulwich, instead of 51, Mr. Wesley T. Page, hon. editor of "Bird Notes," and the writer of the replies to foreign queries in Cage Birds, writes that his address now is "Langstone," Lingfield, Surrey.

Fanciers in Glasgow are having a social evening on Mar. 11 at Sloan's Arcade Cafe, Argyle Street, 6 to 9 p.m., when the Red Cross Show Committee and friends will mark the occasion by presenting Mr. Heggie, their sec., with a small token of esteem, writes Mr. W. Hutchinson. Fanciers heartily invited.

We have been successful in securing the Council Chambers, Leigh Road, Eastleigh, Hants, for our shows during the year, writes Mr. J. Alderslade, hon. sec. Eastleigh C.B.S., and we are holding our pair show on Mar. 15; Nest Feather show, July 12, and the annual show Nov. 15 and 16.

Will members of Bradford West C.B.A. please note the alteration of the date of our annual tea and prize distribution from Saturday, March 11 to March 18, writes Mr. F. P. Terry, hon. sec. I hope all members will allow their names to stand for the later date.

Mr. J. W. Coulthard, Gateshead, who kindly sent to Private Hodgson the copy of Cage Birds, the frontispiece of which he coloured and sent in for our painting competition, writes that the address now is: Private Hodgson, 2705, 5th Border Regt., attached No. 7, Field Coy., Royal Engineers, B.E.F., France.

At the annual meeting of the Wadebridge F.A., writes Mr. E. Mitchell, hon. sec., it was decided to hold our annual show on Aug. 7. The profits will be divided between the Red Cross and the fund in aid of soldiers and sailors blinded in war. We hope that fanciers will give us of their best and make the show a success.

We are pleased to hear that the recent joint show of the London C.B.A., the National British Bird and Mule Club, and the Foreign Bird Exhibitors' League, at Holborn Hall, has proved an all-round success. We understand that all the birds safely reached their homes, and that there is just a small balance on the right side of the financial statement.

ORDER "CAGE BIRDS" IN ADVANCE.

In view of the shortage of paper, which seems certain to get more and more pronounced, we cannot too strongly recommend our readers to order their weekly copy in advance from their local newsagent. It is no trouble to do this, and no obligation beyond the next issue is involved, for such an order could, of course, be revoked at any time if it were found necessary because of removal or for any other reason.

There is little doubt that the time is imminent when we shall be able only to send to each newsagent the exact number of copies he orders, and the newsagent will only order the exact number he knows he can sell. Unless our readers in their turn order their own individual copies in advance, there will therefore be the risk of disappointment, for when they apply for a copy their newsagent will probably be sold out or will have on hand only those copies which have already been booked.

We ask our readers kindly to help us in this matter, and we are sure that our wish will be gratified, and that loss and disappointment all round will be prevented by their adopting the simple proceeding suggested.

Reports of early nesting of the wild birds are more numerous this year than ever. The mild days of January and early February have brought the birds into condition, and eggs with nests are already frequent. Frosts in March and April are to be expected after such an unusually mild winter, and if these occur a bad time would ensue for the young of the insectivorous birds. Even as this is being written the country is under a mantle of snow, and if the wild birds could reason they would be envying the lot of their fellows comfortably housed and carefully tended.

OBITUARY.

One of our members, Mr. H. Wills, who is well-known in the West of England, writes Mr. E. Mitchell, hon. sec. Wadebridge F.A., has suffered the loss of a son, aged 7 years. The lad was well on Sunday last, and within a week was dead and buried. I am sure that the sympathy of fanciers will go out to Mr. and Mrs. Wills in their sad bereavement.

I deeply regret to notify you, writes Mr. A. E. Priest, sec. Bowburn C.B.S., of a great loss to our member, Mr. M. Bainbridge, who lost his dear wife on Feb. 25. Mr. Bainbridge is well known and greatly respected by all fanciers farther afield even than Durham Co., and I am sure I am expressing the deep sympathy of all fanciers in the North of England to him personally, and to all relatives, in their sad bereavement. A vote of sympathy was passed unanimously at meeting of Bowburn C.B.S., Feb. 25. I also regret to say that Mrs. T. Bailes, wife of one of our members, has lost a son in France, in defence of King and country; our sympathy is also offered to all relatives and friends of deceased.

Kindly allow me, writes Mr. R. Hutchinson, hon. sec. W. Stanley Patriotic F.F. and C.B.S., to thank the gentlemen who gave us donations towards our show, and all those who sold tickets. We had a splendid show, entries totalling 506. I would like also to thank Mr. Evans for sending his nearly white Blackbird for exhibition, which was a great attraction, and Mr. J. Masterman for kindly lending pens and staging free; also the judges who gave their services.

A number of the members of the Crew O.S. have desired me to call a meeting to re-start the society and place it on its old footing, as the secretary has been called away for military duties, writes Mr. E. Jaycott. The meeting will be held at the old headquarters, Burton Hotel, Mar. 7, at 7.30 prompt. Will members kindly tell their birdy friends.

We hear that Mr. F. J. Martin, of Battersea, has sold at a big figure to a Northern exhibitor his ticked yellow unlighted Norwich, which stood first at the Holborn Hall, and the buff which was commended. One or two South country judges who have seen the latter consider him to be an outstanding specimen, and with a good moult he should do some winning for his new owner. Meanwhile, he is quite large enough for stock purposes, and we wish the plucky purchaser every success.

I have now obtained the closed rings for those who have ordered them, writes Mr. T. C. Crawhall, president, N.Y.C.C., and they can have them upon applying to me or at the next meeting, Mar. 29. If any member wishes to use the rings and will let me know as soon as possible, I will order a further supply. The price is 1s. 1d. per dozen, and all profit made goes towards special prizes for birds wearing these rings. The number ordered at present is 1,000, for 16 members, and as our membership is nearly three times this number, it is evident that several have not ordered who may intend using them. I cannot order them in single dozens, but must keep the orders back until I get a reasonable number, so it is essential that those requiring them should let me know.

The original drawings of our front page illustrations, and of most other pictures appearing on our pages, may be purchased by readers for framing. Terms for any picture will be sent on application.

That Printer Again.

Quoting from a London paper which had it that "Snow Buntings or Bramblings nest in the north," the "Manchester City News" said: "Now Buntings or bramblings rest in the north."

A Happy Thought.

The Greenock, Port Glasgow, and Gourock O.S. has raised the nice little sum of £12 1s. 8d. as a result of an exhibition in Gourock of the birds which competed at the recent annual show. The amount has been handed over to the Red Cross Fund.

Mems for March.

Late in the month is quite early enough for serious thoughts of pairing up, but now is the time for preparations.

Thoroughly clean, disinfect, and furnish up all breeding and store cages.

When the cages are ready, put the hens in, keeping the cocks in separate quarters.

The birds may have a little egg-food, say a teaspoonful every third day for the cocks, and once a week for the hens.

A special seed diet will also help the cock birds along.

Make up a mixture of equal parts of hemp, millet, linseed, niger and broken groats, and give a teaspoonful to each of the cocks every other day.

Don't forget the green food, especially young dandelion leaves, if you can get them for the cock birds.

The hens will not want the dandelion, unless towards the end of the month they are a bit backward, but give them such greenstuff as watercress, young groundsel, chickweed, etc.

If the hens seem to be coming on too rapidly, add a pinch of sulphate of soda to their drinking water every other day for a week, and keep them from hearing the cocks.

Let the hens have as much cuttlefish bone as they will take, and provide plenty of clean sharp sand in the cage bottom.

The Point of View.

It is said that a stranger recently entered the only barber's shop in a village up north, the shop being the rendezvous of the Hon. Presidents, Vice-Presidents, and other office bearers of the local bird society. He was surprised at the number of serious visaged men conversing in solemn undertones. "Ay, this is a serious business," he ventured to remark as he got into the chair. "It's a' that, sir; the like o' t' hasna happened in the parish for fifty years," replied the barber. The stranger thought the reference rather local, and it was only after putting one or two other questions that he discovered that, while he was thinking of the operations at the Dardanelles, they were lamenting the death of the President's famous Norwich hen!

Birds that Return to the Old Home

The magazine "British Birds" records that a Swallow marked in June 1914 at Cheadle, Staffs, was found at the same place in May 1915; another ringed near Birmingham, in August 1914 was recovered in the same neighbourhood in May last, and a Martin marked at Kinnelhead in June 1913 was re-taken at the same place two years later.

A Welcome Increase.

There seems to be no doubt that the gaily coloured Goldfinch is increasing in number year by year, and a flock of these beautiful birds is reported as having been seen recently on a piece of waste land in Moseley, Birmingham, a district in which the Goldfinch has not previously been noted for many years. Against this, however, we have the statement by Mr. E. Grindey in the "Derbyshire Advertiser" that the Redpoll, Hawfinch, and Goldfinch "are apparently declining under the attention of the professional bird-catcher."

When Does the Song Thrush Sing?

Much correspondence has taken place in the columns of the "Scotsman" as to whether the Song Thrush comes into song in the neighbourhood of Edinburgh before Christmas. The contribution of one correspondent has an incidental interest as an attempt to describe the song of the Mistle-Thrush, the largest member of the Thrush tribe, known in East Lancashire as the shirley (probably shrilly) cock. The notes of the Mistle-Thrush (says the correspondent) are so bold, courageous, and clear that we can forgive their monotony. They are heavier than those of the Song Thrush; they are also inferior in quality, and the bird is incapable of performing the brilliant vocal pyrotechnics of the Song Thrush. Stormy weather has no effect on the Mistle-Thrush's voice. He defies the elements. You may hear him singing in a snowstorm or a gale. There was a long series of cold misty January days in Berkshire some years ago, during which a Mistle-Thrush—the villagers called him "stormcock"—sang for hours from the topmost bough of a great elm. He begins to sing before dawn, and may be heard long after sunset.

In the Courts.

Bird-catchers Fined for Sunday Catching

At West Ham Police Court, Jan. 3, Lewis Gundry, a lad living at 14, Frank Street, Plaistow, was summoned for unlawfully using nets for the taking of wild birds on a piece of land at Plaistow; and for being in possession of 14 recently captured Linnets. A policeman said that on the morning of Sunday, Dec. 19, he saw the defendant using nets for bird catching. He had in his possession 11 decoy birds, 14 wild ones recently taken, and three dead birds. Defendant pleaded guilty, and was fined 5s. in each case; and the magistrate ordered the birds and nets to be forfeited. His brother, Frederick Gundry, was fined 5s. for using nets.

A Brute Properly Punished.

Arthur Wilcox (25), Tudor Street, Winslow Green, was fined 20s., or eleven days, at Oldbury, on Jan. 11, for cruelty to two Linnets at Warley by using them as decoy birds. A police constable said he found defendant engaged in trapping wild birds in a field at Warley on Sunday morning. Defendant had two Linnets secured by string and attached to a "jigger," which forced them to fly up and down. On examining the birds witness found they were in an exhausted and half-dying condition. The magistrate described the case as a shocking instance of cruelty.

WHAT IS THE BEST SINGING BIRD?

The opinions of our readers, as selected from the replies to the question asked on page 112 of last week's issue, are here given.

SOME VOTES FOR THE GOLDFINCH-CANARY

By A. W. SPARKES (Sheffield).

THE best possible bird for singing in a cage is to my mind a Goldfinch-Canary Mule. The combination of the wild song of the Goldfinch with that of a well-bred Canary reaches an ideal of perfection in bird music which is rarely obtained in other cage birds.

In selecting one of the above my choice would be a dark coloured mule, as these generally are more robust in health, have a stronger natural likeness to their male parent, and are more likely to produce his song.

If you can get a bird bred from a "swanky" Goldie and a well-bred Norwich hen you will find he is larger than the average, and strong in general health, which, of course, means you will have a good singer.

Don't put him in an all-wire death trap in front of the window, but give him a box cage with a wire front only. A nice size is about 18 ins. wide, 15 high, and 11 deep. Paint the inside a pale shade of green or blue, and you will see him at his best.

His general appearance will call for attention, and with the cute little way he has of showing himself off, and his many mannerisms, he speedily becomes a prime favourite. He is easily kept in good condition with a good Finch seed mixture. This should be the best obtainable, and if you are not up in the quality of seeds you had better put yourself in the hands of a local seedsman on whom you can rely to supply you. He should also be given plenty of green food in season. He will be found particularly fond of thistle heads and plantain, which should be supplied whenever procurable.

Sing he will at all costs, given a normal condition. He is practically undeniable, and his song will gladden the heart and please the ear. He does not yell, but pours out a series of musical notes which could not possibly jar on the most tender nerves. His father's natural wild notes will be heard, and these will transport us to the country dales we know he comes from, while the Canary notes soften down his song to remind us of the cheery harmony of our own hearths.

If the best results are to be expected rigid cleanliness must be adopted. Keep him clean, you keep him healthy, and health means song. Always remember the difficulty you would be in if you were asked to sing a song with the ashes half way across the drawing room carpet.

By MRS. UPTON (Herne Hill).

I think the Goldfinch-Canary cock mule the most pleasing and easy to tame. It gives the distinct notes of both parents while performing. A suitable cage is the cottage shape, all wire, size 11 by 8 by 15.

Food: The best mixed seed, watercress or apple, clean water daily, not forgetting the bath on mild days. Cover over cage at night with dark thin material.

By A. ABEL (Necton).

The singing bird which I prefer is the Goldfinch-Canary mule. This bird is a long liver, and strong singer. I have one which is twelve years old, and he sings day and night now, especially if we have the frying pan on. I have tried several different kinds of Canaries, and they have been good singers for a few years, but I find the Goldfinch mule is a bird which will live for years, and make a good singer all the time. My bird is in an ordinary drawing-room cage; he is cleaned out once a week, and is given the bath regularly twice a week. His diet consists of ordinary canary seed in his hopper, and a little mixed seed twice a week, which consists of hemp, rape, and linseed mixed together; he has also a piece of apple now and again. I have been offered £2 two or three times for him which I have refused, for I mean to keep him as long as he lives to see to what age a mule will live. I bred him myself, so I know exactly his age.

By A. H. MUDGE (Wimbledon).

I consider one of our best singing birds for cage use is a Goldfinch-Canary mule. This is a bird which, if trained under a Canary, Linnet, Goldfinch, Nightingale, or Skylark will be sure to reproduce more or less perfectly the whole or part of its tutor's song. The Goldfinch mule is heard at its best when trained under one of its parents, for preference the Goldfinch.

These mules are hardy and handsome, and if treated properly, will become very steady. Moreover, they will sing at all times except when moulting. Thus people who object to keeping a purely wild bird in captivity, or dislike the song of a canary, can obtain in the Goldfinch mule the singing qualities, and, to a certain extent, the colouring of the wild parent, combined with the steady demeanour and hardness of the Canary.

This hybrid is best kept in a box cage with a movable front and perches. The cage should be from 12 to 16 inches long, 8 to 9 inches high, and 7 to 8 inches wide. It should be hung in a well-lighted and draughtless place, and about 6 ft. from the ground, no higher than 6½ ft. in any case. The room in which the cage is hung should never attain a greater heat than that of an ordinary living room. A fireless room is preferable to a heated one, and a kitchen is a place to be shunned.

The best staple mixture for feeding a Goldfinch mule is one part of best canary to half a part of rape seed. For tit-bits give dandelion, maw, niger, hemp, linseed, and crushed sunflower, also egg food if the bird will eat it. Provide when in season the following green foods: Dandelion, groundsel, chickweed, hard-heads, freshly collected thistle seeds, plantain heads, and sweet apple.

Be careful not to give too much hemp, niger, sunflower, or egg food; and in all cases give the best seeds obtainable; cheap food is by far the dearest in the long run. Provide a bath daily, but take it away by mid-day, also see there is always plenty of clean drinking water for the bird to get at. Once a week the cage should be thoroughly cleaned and sanded with coarse, gritty sand. With this treatment the Goldfinch mule should live and sing for many years.

By P. T. PULLINGER (Brighton).

This very question is often asked me, and I invariably recommend a dark mule bred between a Goldfinch and a Canary or a Linnet and Canary, as they are very handsome, lively, and hardy, and when they get soiled or smoked, as sometimes does happen, they do not show the dirt like a Canary. Besides, their song is more mellow and less shrill.

They are usually long-lived birds, not being subject to sexual changes, and this is another advantage in their favour. A male Goldfinch mule is easily distinguished from a female by the rich deep orange colour that encircles the beak and emblazons the breast after it has moulted. In the female the colours are much paler.

For caging this kind of bird I should recommend a wire cage with a wooden bottom, oblong in shape, with arched roof; also a draw board, a seed hopper, and a glass drinking trough. Cages made of brass wire are very objectionable, for, when they get wet, as they are sure to do every time the bird washes itself, verdigris is produced, and it is deadly poison; painted cages are also objectionable, as some birds peck off the paint.

As to feeding this kind of bird, I should advise best Canary seed, and genuine summer rape seed, given in the proportion of three parts canary to one of rape; occasionally you may give a little linseed and a few groats, and from April to September a little fresh green food, also in their drinking water once a week half a teaspoonful of honey with a few drops of lemon juice.

Nothing so Good as a Thrush

By A. E. B. BUTCHER, Newington.

THE Thrush easily holds his own with any song bird, and is easy to rear or tame if taken from the nest when about ten days old, kept in a nest or basket in a warm, dark place, and fed every two hours with the following mixture:—Well scalded biscuit meal, mixed with any good insecticide bird food, given in a sloppy state. Feed with a flat stick (don't handle them). Give the food drier as the birds get older, and mix in ants' eggs when the birds are 14 days old. On no account give the young birds any water. When a month old they will feed themselves and take water also (these birds do not drink much water). A good food then is: Take 2 lbs. biscuit meal and one large packet Crissel or 1 lb. of meat meal, and mix together; well scald each morning one eggful of this per bird, strain off, and sprinkle on it a good pinch of ants' eggs, then dry to a crumbly state with any soft-billed bird food. If not obtainable use midlings, peameal, or pollard (bird food preferred). This mixture, when dry, keeps any length of time, and costs about 1d. per week per bird.

Tit bits, when obtainable, are the following: Mealworms, snails, beetles, caterpillars, slugs, maggots, moths, butterflies, woodlice (dried flies they do not care about), green-stuff, chopped watercress, lettuce, dandelion and chickweed, strawberries, currants (fresh or dried), gooseberries, plums, apple, pear, greengages, etc., scraped raw carrot and boiled carrot, boiled potato, bread and milk, meat, beef and mutton lean, also suet, raw or cooked, scraped, and a small bone to pick. These things are extras, they do well on the staple food laid down here only.

The cage should be a box with wire front, 2ft. 6ins. long, 20ins. high, 1ft. deep, and top covered with felt. There should be two perches, placed 9 inches from each end, thus allowing 1ft. flight. Two drawers should be made so that one is always dry; the drawer in use should be strewn with peat moss dust (not sand), and changed at least once a week. Once per month a handful of coarse sand can be thrown in the cage (some take it, some do not).

Keep the bird entirely inside or entirely outside, out of draughts; mine are kept outside all the year round, and are always hard and bright. One temperature is the secret of healthy birds. If the bird is a wild caught one hang him high up, and leave him to himself. After a month lower him a little at a time, and begin to talk to him, and within 12 months he will be a good songster and a tame bird. Wild-caughts often make the tamest birds. The sex of the young birds can be told at the end of the year; the cocks will be warbling.

The feeding laid down here is suitable for Blackbirds, Starlings, Larks, Robins, etc., but the Thrush is the champion of them all, and would make a grand companion for our wounded Tommies and cheer them up through many weary hours. It will repay a thousand times the care bestowed on it by giving to us that sweet and joyous song which none can give like the Thrush. It therefore gets my vote. Always give a bath when the weather is temperate.

Roller Canaries for Wounded Soldiers.

By W. R. LINDLEY (Rochdale).

The best singing bird, in my opinion, is the British Roller Canary. He is valued not only for his wonderful vocal powers, which greatly excel the song of any other cage bird, but is admired by all as a domestic pet.

He is easily provided for, a small amount of seed daily, and fresh water, a small tit-bit, such as a bit of sweet apple or a sprig of fresh watercress, at the hand of his mistress will add to his affection.

The Baccup Roller Canary Club recently made a presentation of a Roller Canary and cage to the military hospital at Birch Hill, Dearnley, near Rochdale, on behalf of our wounded soldiers lying there, and one of these, a Scotchman by birth, and a bird fancier in his domestic life, having kept various species of birds, has decided to dispose of those he has and purchase a breeding strain of British Roller Canaries.

He also wishes on behalf of his wounded comrades that every sick ward in hospitals be possessed of a good Roller Canary like the one in their ward, it has brightened their surroundings ever since it made its appearance among them two months ago, and all of them say they would not like to be without it.

IN FAVOUR OF THE YORKSHIRE CANARY.

By H. HATFIELD (York).

IN my opinion a good, well-bred Yorkshire Canary can compete with any other bird for song, beside possessing a smart appearance and sociable disposition.

My reason for preferring the "Yorkshire" is his bold but tractable manner; he soon becomes attached to his master or mistress, and shows his happiness at their approach by his continual "Tweet" and lack of fear; he is able to make one understand just what he wants, and shows his satisfaction on being attended to by the knowing way in which he looks.

The most suitable cage for a singing Canary is, I think, the all-wire one, fitted with a solid roof and glass panels around the sides; these prevent seed husks and sand being scattered about. The food and water vessels should be of glass; they are easy to keep clean, and they also keep the seed and water more sweet than the metal ones. A draw-board should not be overlooked; this is easily cleaned, and is far more conducive to the bird's health than the fixed bottom.

The cage should be placed in a room with a fair amount of light, plenty of fresh air, but free from all draughts. I think a table or something firm well below the level of the gas is the most suitable position.

For a song Canary I think a good "Canary mixture" made up into packet form cannot be beaten, but green food should also be given daily in summer. It may take the form of dandelion heads, shepherd's purse, or groundsel, or a piece of sweet apple, banana, or boiled carrot in winter will be much appreciated by the birds if given occasionally.

A bath should be provided every other day in summer and about once a week in winter; this should be given early in the morning, so as to give the bird (and his cage) time to get quite dry before he settles down for the night.

Fresh water for drinking should be given daily, also the draw-board should be kept well covered with good, clean, fresh sand. A piece of cuttle fish should always be placed between the bars of the cage; this affords them something to peck at, and is also a good tonic.

In conclusion, the most necessary points to see to are that the seed is clean and fresh, plenty of light and ventilation, fresh water daily, and plenty of clean, gritty sand.

Spiders to Destroy Red Mite.

SIR.—As a reader of CAGE BIRDS since its birth, I have seen a number of letters on the best way to kill red mite. I have been a breeder of Yorkshires for 40 years, and have tried various remedies to exterminate them, but all have failed. During the 40 years I can only remember 3 years in which I have been troubled with them. You will no doubt wonder why I am without them, and for the benefit of others I would say that my bird room is never without spiders, I never kill one. I believe they kill thousands of red mite. Once a year I whitewash my cages with best Paris white and black the fronts. Some breeders don't like the spiders, but the spiders like the red mite. I might say that I am just now cleaning my cages, and have examined the ends of the perches, but there is no sign of the eggs of the red mite. I have gone into my room with a lighted candle, but could not see any mite on the birds.

AN OLD YORKSHIRE BREEDER.

A Recipe which Should be Preserved.

SIR.—If F. W. James and A. Novice will try the following recipe for egg bread I am sure they will find it quite satisfactory; this recipe was first given in CAGE BIRDS for Feb. 21, 1914, by Mr. Thos. Chiswell. I have used it since that time, and I think I shall never go back to the hard-boiled egg and bread. I have some on hand now which I made almost 12 months ago.

Take 1 lb. of the finest ground whole wheat meal, make it into a stiff dough with as many fresh eggs as the meal will absorb. Bake it for three hours. Grate it, and dry it in an oven, or cut it in slices and grind it in a machine or with a rolling-pin. This dry egg food keeps for years, and is always ready for use. Of this you may give half a teaspoonful every day after having moistened it with a little water. In it there are from 6 to 8 eggs to the lb. of meal, according to size; no water or other fluid is used when making the dough. It can be made when eggs are cheap.

My method of using this egg food for feeding the young is: Five parts of egg food, 1 part maw seed, 1 part fine sugar, mix dry, and then add 4 parts of boiling water. I then add a few drops of cod liver oil emulsion. Give to the hens in the same manner as the ordinary egg and bread. When mixed this food will keep sweet for 24 hours. I consider it to be a saving of 50 per cent. on the egg and bread method.

ACORN.

On Sending Birds by Rail.

SIR.—I notice in your issue of Feb. 19, Mr. Atherton recommends that Rollers should be sent in a small wire cage inside a wooden box. I presume he means in the same way as the small wicker cages are sent inside of boxes, and I should like to give a word of caution as to this advice. To my cost I have proved that such a system of packing may on a long railway journey prove a death trap to the bird.

If one could be sure that the package would be kept the right way up all would be well, but just watch a railway porter taking his parcels to or from a train. Perhaps he has a dozen, both arms full, and some under his arms, utterly careless as to which way up any of them are, and what happens. Every grain of seed is shot out of the seed box, on bottom of cage, and it is then out of the bird's reach for the remainder of the journey.

I would recommend a plain wooden box, with just sufficient ventilation, and the box wrapped in paper; a small perch on the bottom will give the bird a firm foot hold, and no matter which way up the box is, the food will be inside and within the bird's reach.

HENRY NERVE.

A Transit Insurance Company Suggested.

SIR.—In answer to Mr. Parlett's letter, I don't think there is any element of luck in my cases; they are quite typical. There are two reasons why Mr. Parlett has experienced good fortune. One is that the town of Sheffield has a good railway service in all directions, the other is that the district manager is probably a very decent chap, and would pay up without being plausible "get outs." I mentioned a case between Liverpool and Manchester. It is just a short, straight run, and a claim was put in for one bird dead, but the manager said the damage was not due to neglect on the part of the carrier. The party concerned thought the claim too trifling to press, and so it was dropped. Only recently I had a consignment of birds from Kent on approval. On arrival the package had been opened and three birds missing, and it had been 24 hours on way as well. The owner put a claim in, but I never heard if he was settled with. I once sent some birds to Crook, Durham, and they never arrived, having been "lifted" on the way. It took the railway company seven weeks to pay up, and they asked for a reduction.

The office in Liverpool closes at 7, and birds despatched before then should get to John O'Groats or Land's End by 10 next morning. Insured birds, with me, are never delayed. The railway companies know their liability, and their object is to be relieved of it. Result, quick transit, no over-carrying by guards, or being left on stations at junctions till the porter remembers them. I would be glad, and many more too, if Mr. Parlett would tell us the magic that touches the companies up.

Mr. Hardbattle's case is on a par with the one of Liverpool to Manchester which I quoted. It strikes me, the more obvious the neglect in transit the worse consideration you get from the company. I always held the Midland as A1, the Central are good, L. and Yorkshire are good to some parts. The L. and N.W. Ry. are the worst offenders. An idea that might reduce the delays would be "a Universal Animal Transit Insurance Co.," a yearly premium of, say, 1s. 6d. per year for small birds and pro rata for larger kinds, poultry, pigeons, etc. The members should have a supply of their printed labels, and if there is any claim the insurance company would tackle railway companies, with more satisfactory results than private individuals, the insurance company, of course, settling with the fanciers. This is the sort of thing we need. The support of a few is no use; it is a matter needing every bird fancier's attention. Unity is strength; half-hearted measures mean defeat.

F. COCKRILL.

The Disputed Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids.

SIR.—I have been keenly interested not only in the correspondence regarding the reputed Song Thrush-Blackbird hybrids, but also in their production, as I well remember the question being asked if the cross was possible some two years ago. The one answering that query stated that it was thought possible, but that they would look too much like a Thrush or a hen Blackbird. That some hybrids do take to one parent very much is seen in clear mules. Only the other week I saw what appeared to be simply a Greenfinch, until it shook its tail, and gave a clear Canary "tweet," telling clearly that it was a mule.

Mr. Anderson seems to be very open with his birds, and not to be afraid of showing them, and this makes me assured that he must be an honest man. May I ask him, now that the show season is about over, to give us a list of their doings at the shows, naming the show and the judge and the award at each show. If two-thirds of the judges have accepted them as hybrids, I shall do the same, and I think most fanciers would. Another thing of great interest might be a photograph or drawing of one of the birds seeing these are supposed to be the first on record.

ARTHUR SIMONS.

We think no good purpose would be served by the publication of a drawing or photograph of either of the three birds in question. It is admitted by all who have seen them that at present they show so little of the Blackbird that anyone who was not possessed of the evidence concerning their production would pass them as Thrushes pure and simple. The little indications of the Blackbird cross which some can see in the birds would of necessity not show themselves in a drawing or photograph. What the birds will be like after an adult moult is a question which time alone can solve.—EDITOR.

The Song of the Canary.

SIR.—The interrogation of the Rev. H. A. Soames (p. 97), and the statement made in Mr. Cornish's book are of some interest to me, and this must be my excuse for writing. It is nearly twenty years ago since my pen was engaged in discussions on birdy matters, and in the course of nature I am getting an old man, so I hope you will let my imperfections down easy.

Contentions on hybrids, etc., were very often "hot stuff" in those days, Dr. Butler, Dr. Greene, Messrs. Verrall, Vale, Spilman, Davics, Lanford Jones, and Finn, being among the foremost contributors. So much by way of introduction.

The many forms and varieties of our domestic Canaries are probably descendants of the Serin and Citril Finches, or at any rate departures from the original type attributable to the extensive intermixture of breeds which has taken place between them, especially the Serin and Citril Finches, the latter cross having been, it seems, more general in Italy than elsewhere. If therefore the original domestic cock Canary's father was a Citril Finch, I think if he had heard no other bird's song but his father's, it would be quite in order to state that the said Canary's song would certainly have been an imitation (better or worse) of his father's song.

I have now in my possession a Goldfinch-Canary hybrid, which sings the Goldfinch's notes, because he was trained in his youth by his father, and just lately I had a cock Greenfinch which I reared under a hen Canary, and he never heard a Greenfinch in his life. He had no song at all, only twitterings like the saucy House Sparrows of Chelsea, which come for crumbs, etc., on the window sill, and occasionally a noise like the check on a 4-inch Nottingham reel when a Jack runs off with the bait.

Now if the Reverend gentleman will step into a London bird shop at this season of the year he will hear the marvellous singing of scores of little common-looking Canaries in tiny wooden cages, which I understand now come from Holland, and the song of these birds is quite distinct from the ordinary domestic Canary's song. Again, if he had been placed when an infant in the wilds of Africa, and reared by Hottentots, he would in due course speak, sing, and dance like his foster parents, proving Locke's great truism that knowledge is gained by external impressions. Thus we have all been copiers, some in more favourable circumstances and environment than others.

Hen Bullfinches and Hybrid Breeding.

SIR.—In the "Mule and Hybrid" number of CAGE BIRDS I was hoping to see a few hints on "Unfertile Eggs from Hen Bullfinches: How to Avoid." Also whether it is advisable to let cock Goldfinch or cock Canary only run with hen Bullfinches occasionally when they begin to nest, and how to get hen Bullfinches in breeding condition early.

I have been trying for five years to get fertile eggs from Bullfinch hens, and if any of your many experienced readers would write a few lines on the above subjects, I am sure they would be appreciated by others as well as by Flanders as a Health Resort.

SIR.—Doubtless many of your North London and Leyton readers will be glad to learn that Mr. F. Williamson, late chairman North London C.B.A., and Leyton C.B.A., is "somewhere in Flanders," where he has been for some months past for the benefit of his health, and where he is thoroughly enjoying himself. He writes me from "Somewhere" that he has never felt better in his life, and that he has actually put on a stone in weight since he has been out there; how he managed to live the years before he made the acquaintance of Flanders mud, he declares to be a never-to-be-solved mystery.

He was always very popular with the North London and Leyton fanciers, and I am sure he would be very pleased to receive a line from his old friends, and for that reason I send you his address: Pte. F. T. Williamson, 110650, A.S.C., No. 2 Section, 2nd Army Heavy Artillery, Ammunition Park, B.E.F.

Birds and Shells.

SIR.—"W." writing to "Country Life," says that a letter he has received from an officer in France is as follows:

"One of the quaintest sights I know in this topsy-turvy land is the behaviour of the birds of the field and of the hedgerows under shell fire. The little imps of mischief, and more particularly the Sparrows and the Starlings, have adapted themselves to the new conditions to a remarkable degree. The shrill shriek of a coming shell is heard. If that shell is going to burst where they will be within the danger zone, they are off their wall or hedge in the twinkling of an eye. If it is going beyond reach of them—no matter how awful the noise of its coming—they do not pay the slightest attention to it. (I have only once seen a bird killed by shell since I came out here.) This is the more remarkable as the little rogues cannot know whether the coming danger is shrapnel, which bursts in the air, spreading a cone of bullets, or high explosive, which bursts on percussion."

OLD READER.

A Lancashire Lad at the Lancs. and Lizard Show.

SIR.—Whenever possible I visit these shows, and it is one of the most enjoyable times I have, for everybody is glad to see you. It makes you feel that such shows should be more frequent. I am trying to write this letter, Mr. Editor, a bit "fine," you know, still I am bound to use a word of two in the Owdham talk, so you must excuse me mixing it a bit. This show was held at the Volunteer Hotel, just the place for a show.

After I had a good look at the show, I stopped listening to one or two on 'em arguing about their birds, saying they might have stood further up in the money. In my opinion the judge, Robert Barras, made a very good job on 'em. Most objections were in one Lizard class, and the British Bird class, but all was taken in good part, they speak their opinion and then they have finished.

I was disappointed with the Lancashire classes, and I wondered what the judge thought of the poor turn up—9 birds in 6 classes, and, must I say, not a gradely Lancashire among 'em; some with big bodies, and a decent copy or two, but a Plainhead was best of the bunch, 6 on 'em were across the perch, and short in the leg (they wanted supplying with stilts), a remark I overheard, and quite appropriate too. Teddy Fuller would have let go had he seen 'um, but I heard he wasn't coming to the show.

As for the dark 'uns, these were a grand lot, and worth going a long way to see. After a display like this, I think the Lizard Canary is coming into favour again, and good luck to 'em, for they are the prettiest bird on any show table. Joe Hampshire had a red letter day, best he has had for some time; also Barnes, Hamer, Rukin, Hardy (I wondered why Billy hadn't shown some light 'uns).

When you have had a good look at the birds and retire to the smoke room, then you are in the company of fanciers; all right good-hearted chaps, and you cannot help feeling pleased with yourself. You hear one cracking a joke, then a story or two, a wrinkle or two, and a drink or two, and a how d'you do. Everybody interested and jolly good tempered. It was a right popular show, and I was highly pleased to see so many fanciers present, amongst whom I noticed Jack Ogden Vickers, Old Fittin and George, Beatty, Noah Stansfield, Hardy, Fred, and John Hamer, Hampshire, Rukin; also amongst the Manchester chaps I knew were Barker Clegg, Turner, Fulshaw, Oldham, Millington, and Davies; all giving you a hearty shake of the hand, and you feel sorry the time is so short in such good company. If any readers of CAGE BIRDS within easy distance want a good time, they should not forget to come to the next show.

THOMAS BUFF COPPY.

The Evening Flight of Starlings.

How the Earth Shock Shocked the Birds.

SIR.—It would doubtless be as interesting to your readers as to myself to know how far Starlings travel to roost, for to see them come in at sunset to a roosting place near Burton-on-Trent is a marvellous sight. One would think that every Starling living travelled to this one particular spot. It is a plantation adjoining to a wood called Rockets Oak on the estate of the Dowager Lady Burton, of Rangemore Hall, six miles from Burton-on-Trent. One suddenly sees hundreds of tiny black specks coming swiftly along against the sky, first high, then low; then a swish against the wind, with extended wings and tail; then a drop, and every bird is on its perch. They come in from North, East, South, and West, in batches of all sizes from twos and threes, fours, and so on until they come in hundreds. Are there similar places throughout England where they roost as they do here? For about two months in the autumn they were away from this place, and I concluded they had found fresh feeding places, but they are all back at their old home now.

One Sunday night recently I walked round to the plantation to put them up, not with the intention of driving them away, but to see the thousands of birds on the wing, and it was a sight I shall never forget. They could make very little headway, as they impeded each other in their flight as they moved higher up the plantation. They were not to be startled by me, however, as they were on the Friday night when the Midlands were visited by an earthquake shock at 7.30 p.m. The next instant this huge flock were on the wing, also the Pheasants crowing, and the Owls shrieking. What a chattering there was when the birds had settled again, just the same as they do after settling while it is light. It would be interesting to know if all wild birds were so disturbed, as this would never have been noticed had it not been for the quantity.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (East End)

Meeting held Feb. 23, Blue Bell Hotel, Shields-End. Mr. Young chair. Members elected: Mr. R. Greally and Mr. P. Robson, Walsend. Rules were revised and adopted. Decided to adhere to our Annual Show date, Nov. 24 and 25. Secs. please note. Our time being limited the question of judges was left over till next meeting.—J. W. Coutts.

BARROW C.B.A.

Meeting, Gardner's Restaurant, G. Largs presiding, and a fair turnout. N.F. Show was decided for July 8. Judges, Messrs. Housie (Bradford) and Wilson (Frislington). We also decided to hold an Open Show on Nov. 3 and 4 for the Red Cross, and as this is our first venture we hope for the support of all fanciers. Judges are not yet settled. Table Show of British, a fine lot, among them some well-known winners: 1, 2, 3, the Mrs. Vindes; he, c. Shuckley. The first bird, a Linnet, changed hands at a good figure. Next meeting a washing exhibition. Members turn up and help arrangements for the Open Show.—D. McFarlane, Hon. Sec.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES.

Meeting and Table Show, Feb. 21. Mr. Raynes presided over a good attendance, and a pleasant evening was spent. Decided to hold N.F. Show first Saturday in July, also to have a sharp debate practice night at next meeting, so please turn up in good numbers. Will members please return unsold tickets for January show as early as possible and oblige. Table show, 40 birds staged for matched pairs. Yorks.: 1, Tansey; 2, Wilson; 3, Riley. Nor.: 1, A. G. Smith; 2, J. Green; 3, S. Cook. Mulling: 1, Hubbard; 2, Turner; 3, Appleton. Mr. E. Dooley judged, and afterwards explained the different points of the birds, which brought an interesting evening to a close.—J. Green, Hon. Sec.

ABERDARE C.B.S.

Well-attended meeting of the newly-formed Aberdare C.B.S., Miller's Restaurant, Feb. 23. Officials elected: Chair, Mr. T. Davies; Aberdare; Vice, W. H. Thomas; Aberdare; Sec., J. M. Shelby-James; 4, Stuart-St. Aberdare. The accounts will be paid through the London City and Midland Bank, Aberdare branch. The meetings will be held every alternate Tuesday at 7.30, at headquarters, Miller's Restaurant. Entrance fee, 4/-, and nomination 1/- per annum. Rules (special) will be discussed at the next meeting. The Society has already a guaranteed sum of £10, and is fortunate in enrolling W. Davies, of Aberdare, who has given a donation of £1 towards procuring a cup. Sec. will be pleased to enrol members, and will answer any questions regarding the Society. There is a great possibility of the Society going ahead as the interest already shown is most satisfactory.—J. M. Shelby-James, Hon. Sec., 4, Stuart St., Aberdare.

NORTHERN CRESTED CLUB.

Annual meeting, Feb. 23, Shild and Son's Cafe, Newcastle. Present: Thos. Robson, J. G. Hutchinson, J. Farrer, Geo. Simpson, Thos. Bewick, Jas. Dickinson, Geo. Dobson. Mr. T. Robson presided. Balance sheet, which proved satisfactory, left a balance in hand of £2 10s. 7d., after purchasing a silver challenge cup at £5 10s., and a large reduction in membership. Eleven members dropped out, and there was one death in the year, while only four members were elected. Officers elected: Pres., Mr. J. Ford Maling; Vice-Pres., W. F. Barnett; W. F. Swan; Thos. Robson, A. Lester, T. C. Crawhall; Chair, W. F. Swan; Vice-Chair, Thos. Robson; Committee, J. Farrer, J. Rishborough, J. G. Hutchinson, R. Armstrong, R. S. Bewick, Jas. Dickinson, Geo. Simpson, Thos. Bewick, Jas. Stanger, W. Forster; Hon. Sec. and Treas., Geo. Dobson. Two novice members were elected: T. Smith, G. Robson. A discussion arose to the judging of our Cup Competition, and it was decided that it be judged by a Crest judge proposed by the members, and that this rule be added to our new rule-books. This is an old rule that has not lately been carried out.—Geo. Dobson, Sec.

EDINBURGH C.B.S.

Meeting, Cairns Memorial Hall, George-rd., Feb. 19. A good turn-out present. New members elected: Messrs. Williamson, G. Milne, D. Purvis, D. Wilkie and R. Farmer. Very good for the first meeting of year. Agreed that classification for Annual Show be same as last year. Judges nominated: Messrs. J. F. Dewar, Nor.; Wm. Thomson, For.; A. Patterson, Scotch Fanciers; John Sykes, Brit. and For. Sec. was instructed to write these to see if they would officiate. The birds at the Table Show were judged by Mr. A. W. Watson, who was ably assisted by Mr. Michie and another gentleman. Mr. Watson's awards were sealed until after the Judging Competition in which about a dozen took part. Nor.: 1, Mill; 2, 3, Charlton. Brit.: 1, Mill; 2, Robertson; 3, Napier. Bord. Ck.: 1, Weir; 2, Mill; 3, Brash. Hen: 1, spl. Weir; 2, spl. 3, Brash. Scotch Fanciers: 1, Bowman. Goldf.: 1, Michie; 2, Ritchie; 3, Bowman. Siskin, etc.: 1, Adam; 2, Ritchie; 3, Napier. A.O. Finch: 1, spl. 4, Ritchie; 2, spl. Michie; 3, Wallace. Hen: 1, spl. Brash; 2, Spittal; 3, Adam. Pairs for Mink Breeding: 1, 3, Bowman; 2, Spittal. For Hyb.: 1, Weir; 2, Spittal. Old Mule: 1, Weir. Prizes in Judging Competition: 1, Adam; 2, Hutchinson; 3, tie, Weir and Charlton. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Watson and his stewards was accorded.—J. Charlton, Sec.

PELTON FELL C.B.S.

Meeting, Feb. 19, for election of officers. Mr. W. Forster was elected chairman and Mr. J. Stanger sec. Committee, R. Coates, R. W. Boyd, Wild, A. R. Young, J. McDonald, and R. Bewick. Balance sheet was considered satisfactory. New members: Messrs. Fletcher, R. Forster, H. Briggs, J. Stobbs, D. Curry, J. Jackson, Wylhiet, and C. R. Appleton. We had a good schedule last season, with 46 classes for 26 members, and paid 9s. 6d. a class for 6d. a cage; five entries made a full class. We have a good schedule this season, and we would like a larger one if members can improve it. Our yearly sub. is 5s., and is open to any radius. We are running a section special, for each member to pay 1s. the money to go to the best bird in that section; if enough for a second best bird in the section it can be made at next meeting, March 11. Sections are Norwich, Crest, C.B., Bord., Yorks., Mule, Canary, A.V. British birds, Section 1; Linnet H.M., Linnet F.M., Siskin, Redpoll and Twite, Greenf. No. 2, Goldf. and Bullf., Chaffinch, Bramble, Bunting, and A.O.V. Hardbill. Birds in section to be bred by exhibitor in 1916. Anyone wishing to become a member should send name to sec. We have arranged for a table show July 15, to be on the table by 12. We have lost one of our members at the front (Mr. J. Walker, of Birtley). He used to keep the shows alive, and is sadly missed at our meetings. We have had our late sec., Mr. J. Robinson, home from the front for a few days, also Mr. J. Redpath.—J. Stanger, Sec., 59, Grange Terrace, Pelton Fell S.O., Co. Durham.

MIDLAND ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, Feb. 24, headquarters, Seven Stars, St. John-st., Wolverhampton. Owing to the heavy snow storm very few members were able to attend. Mr. M. Jacquelin presided. Letters read from Sec. B.R.C.C. and Sec. of Leeds Roller Club, re "Board of Control" the matter was left in abeyance until next meeting. Elected members: Messrs. Mason, Garbett, Ramsay, Boddice, H. Mason, Heltzman; total membership, 70. I have 1,500 B.R.C.C. 1916 rings to dispose of. Fanciers wishing to join should apply to J. W. Thomson, Hon. Sec., 9, Gorsebrook-rd., Wolverhampton.

HANLEY C.B.S.

First annual dinner, Angel Hotel, Feb. 19, with a good attendance of fanciers and their wives. As soon as the menu was got through Mr. C. J. Robinson introduced the new President, Mr. Barker, who proposed the health of the Society and wished it every success. The balance sheet showed a balance of £7 10s. 2d. in hand on the year's working, and the Society had also three challenge cups which showed every credit to the Secretary, Mr. C. Beckett. Officers for 1916: Mr. Barker, Pres.; D. Lawton, Vice-Pres.; C. J. Robinson, Chair; G. Lawton, and T. Hawley, Vice-Chair; Committee, all members. Mr. C. Beckett was asked to take the duties of Sec. again; Mr. W. Brown, Treas. Discussions were heard on cups; then Mr. W. Brown, sen., obliged with a song, and Mrs. C. Beckett sang "The Soldier's Daughter." Mr. C. J. Robinson made the presentation of cups, medals, etc.: Yorks. champion cup, Mr. G. Lawton and Mr. S. Pygott, tie, 144 each, decided to hold the cup six months each; Novice Yorks., Mr. C. Beckett, his second year in succession; Nor. Nov., Mr. W. Oldham, challenge cup given by Mr. C. Beckett; Mr. G. Lawton received a spl. as the winner of last year's Yorks. champion cup, and Mr. Beckett a gold medal as winner of Novice Yorks. cup, also a tea service for most points in Novice Yorks. for the year with 204 points. Mr. C. J. Robinson was heartily thanked for the three fine stands for the cups he gave to the Society, and one of the most enjoyable evenings was brought to a close.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

MOPY AND RUFFLED (E. Allfrey).—The bird seems to have contracted a chill, which will probably be the fate of many during the shocking weather conditions of the past week. Keep it in a quite warm place, and see that the warmth is fairly equable, especially that it does not drop to a frigid degree during the night. In addition to the staple seed diet give a morsel of bread and milk, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with soft sugar, every second day, and on the alternate days give a morsel of banana and a pinch of maw seed. In the water add five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine and sweet spirit of nitre two days in every three for a fortnight, or you may stop it sooner if the symptoms have quite disappeared.

FITTING UP A ROOM (W. Chamberlain).—Three cocks will be quite sufficient to run with ten hens in the room you describe. Keep the floor thickly strewn with gritty, clean sand, and the food and water would be safest from mice on a small table in the centre of the room, with a strip of tin four inches wide tacked closely around each leg about four inches from the floor. For small twiggy bushes to fix at intervals around the walls for nesting sites nothing beats Scotch fir, though holly, or hawthorn will answer the purpose fairly well. In these bushes the little wicker basket nests usually sold at a penny each are just the thing when securely fastened in the angles of the twigs, not more than one in each bush. Besides these sites you may hang up on the walls a number of the small wooden travelling cages in which rollers are usually sold, prepared by removing the perches, water-pot and seed-box, and taking out the short bars at the end over the seed-box. These make excellent and safe nesting sites, which are much appreciated by the birds. They may be hung anywhere, in the corners and around the walls, though it is best not to place them at a height that is inconvenient to peep into them if necessary at any time.

MOULTING AGAIN (E. L. S.).—I am afraid the bird's age is against him ever getting quite robust again, but still, the following treatment for three or four weeks should give him another start. Keep him quite on the warm side, and it would be an advantage if you kept a light cover over the cage until the feathers had ceased dropping. Also see that the temperature is fairly equable. In addition to the staple seed diet give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed every second day, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle and broken groats, and a morsel of banana. You may also give a dandelion leaf daily as soon as you can find them, which you may already do in warm, sheltered nooks and corners. With a staple diet of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape limit the dietary to the above-named items. Dissolve half a drachm of ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine in an ounce of sherry, add a teaspoonful of glycerine, and give 20 drops of this mixture in the water two days in every three for a month.

DOUBTFUL SEX (V. E.).—The indications you name are not infallible, but so far as they go they are rather in favour of the doubtful bird being a cock. You mention nothing about song, and this would be quite the surest sign for you to be guided by. You should cage the birds separately, give a morsel of bread and milk daily sprinkled with soft sugar, daily every second day, and on the alternate days a morsel of banana, or small spray of water-cress, or leaf of dandelion and a pinch of maw, which should bring out the birds into full song very quickly at this season, and thus make them reveal their sex more definitely.

TOO EPICUREAN (A. M. J.).—If the birds are so easily upset by partaking of mixed seed or luxuries it is probably the outcome of a too liberal indulgence in these luxuries. The remedy is easy. Do not indulge them to any appreciable extent. Let them go on with the staple of plain canary seed, and give just a pinch of summer rape twice or three times a week, a little boiled or soaked rape occasionally instead of soft food, and green salad whenever seasonable. It would do them no harm to add ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence to the water daily for a week. During the breeding season, as they appear to engorge themselves at that time to the detriment of the young, you should remove the cocks when the hens begin to sit, leaving the latter to hatch out and rear the young by themselves, and start from the first with a mixture of equal parts bread crumbs or crushed biscuit and egg yolk, and double the proportion of bread or biscuit by the third day, and begin then to give green food daily, and allow a fair quantity of it, giving the egg food twice a day only—morning and afternoon. Then you should find less difficulty on this score.

STRANGE BEHAVIOUR (Uncle Jim).—The bird is most likely in a hypersensitive condition owing to having become weakly and anemic. You should see that it is not hung high up near the ceiling where the air is always more or less vitiated and unwholesome, and it is generally more than less so. Also see that it is in a bright and healthful position, where it will have the benefit of plenty of fresh pure air without the disadvantage of direct draughts; offer the bath on every mild and bright day, and give it regular and methodical attention as advised to "Beginner, Horschay," in our last issue. Every third day for a month give, besides the staple seed diet, a morsel of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, and drop on it each time two drops of cod liver oil emulsion, and then sprinkle it lightly with soft sugar. On the intervening days give first a morsel of banana or green salad when you can get it in a fit condition for use, and also, if you have any available, give on these days a mealworm, and on the other days give a third of a teaspoonful of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, niger, sesame and chopped sunflower seeds. In the drinking water add 20 drops of chemical food every second day during the month. It will be best seen after this treatment whether the bird is worth keeping.

PULLS HER FEATHERS (F. H.).—You should first make yourself quite sure that the bird and cage are quite free from insect pests. For red mite examine the cage closely, especially around the joints of the door, ends of perches, etc., and if you find any areas covered with a fine white powdery deposit you may be sure the cage is infested with this pest. On the other hand, catch the bird and examine the body, especially under the wings, and you will soon discover if there are any grey lice present. In either event take the necessary steps to eradicate them, as you will have seen in this column several times just lately. If no insects are present, the bird may be simply suffering from ennui. Try and find her some occupation. Keep a morsel of some green-food, fruit, or even a few seed heads of grass if you can procure any, in the cage for her to peck at, or tie a morsel of string on to a wire for her to unravel. Every second day you may with advantage give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts millet, niger, teazle and broken groats, and on the alternate days a pinch of maw seed and also a mealworm if you have any of the latter available. Give a morsel of bread and milk three times a week. All these in addition to the usual staple diet of canary and rape, or plain canary. In the drinking water add ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week or so.

EARLY MATING (C. H.).—If you mean that you have already mated the Yorkshires, you have done so much too soon, as, possibly, the weather conditions of the past week will have already convinced you. But assuming that things go on all right you should remove the cock from the Yorkshire hen as soon as she begins to sit and cage him alone until the second hen is ready to begin nesting and the time is more appropriate. A month hence is quite early enough to begin breeding. By that time the Yorkshire hen may have sat her appointed time on the first clutch, and may be ready to follow on after the Norwich hen has nested. But anyway, you cannot do better than separate the cock and keep him alone from the time the first hen begins to sit until the proper time for nesting, which will be about the end of March, according to the condition of the weather and the birds, or the first week in April. Then mate him with the hen which is most keen on nesting, and leave them together until she has laid her clutch and is commencing to sit, when you must remove him as already advised, and mate him with the second hen. When the second hen begins to sit, remove him again and cage him separately until the first is again ready for him for the second brood, and then repeat the same procedure. In each case you will leave the hens to hatch out the eggs and rear the young by themselves, which they will do just as well as if the cock was left with them. You should begin to give a little green-food to young broods about the fourth day, and thenceforth give a little freshly-gathered each morning and afternoon until the young are safely reared. As you seem to be quite a tyro you would be well advised to get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our manager will send you, post free, for 7d., and study its pages well during the next few weeks. It will save you much disappointment.

NOT MOULTED (M. A.).—There is a great probability of the bird dropping into moult very soon and thus frustrating any attempts at breeding with her for some time to come. You could expedite matters by moving the bird to a cold-room without fire, but see that it is not exposed to any direct cold draught. This removal would probably throw the bird into moult immediately at this season, and then you would only need to cover over the cage for two or three weeks, and after that keep the bird in a comfortable but not heated temperature, where the warmth was fairly equable in order to get the moult over as speedily and completely as possible. By taking these steps at once you may have the bird fit for breeding about the middle of April, and still have time to get a normal season out of her. You must not, however, mate her for at least two or three weeks after she has quite ceased dropping feathers, and it would be exceedingly risky to mate her with a moult impending—much better give her a season's rest than do that. As regards the feather-pulling, you may safely treat her the same as advised in latter part of reply to "F.H." in this issue.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

FEEDING A GREENFINCH (Novice, R. C. W.).

—A good staple food for the Greenfinch is the following: canary 2 parts, rape seed 1 part, teazle 1 part. In addition to this you may give him occasionally a little linseed and hemp, and, if you can procure a packet of real wild seed mixture, let him have a spoonful twice a week. He is very fond of unflower, and although it is somewhat fattening, a few grains three or four times a week will not hurt him, providing he is in a cage large enough to exercise in. When this cold spell of weather has gone, you can hunt round for green-food for him. There are several other kinds of food suitable for the Green bird, but I think you had better procure the Nutshell on the Greenfinch, in which you will find all particulars. (2) The reason your birds quarrel is that they are not yet quite fit, but you need not leave them long enough together to do any damage to each other.

BREEDING MULES AND CANARIES (J. W. H.).

—Your sample of rape seed is particularly good, and I must congratulate you upon growing it yourself; it will be very useful now the supply is somewhat limited. (2) If you are able to manage it in the way you suggest, there is no reason why you should not take a nest of Canaries from your hen the last round. The reason breeders have a nest of Canaries first is that the hen is usually fit for breeding before the Finch is ready, and some hens put off going to nest as long as they possibly can (they are forced to pair with a Finch, and the summer is sometimes very far advanced before they begin breeding).

KEEPING OWLS AND MACPIES (Denys Weston).—Both Owls and Macpies can be kept in captivity, although the former are not great favourites with bird-keepers. The Owls require a flesh diet, such as Sparrows, mice, butcher's meat, and beetles. If you have the means of procuring all these you would be able to keep an Owl. I have had two or three in my time, but I do not "hanker after them." I really think they are more trouble than they are worth. The same amount of trouble and expense would give you far more pleasure with other birds. The Macpie, on the other hand, is a most desirable pet, always amusing and full of life. His food consists of various kind of soft food, such as soaked Melox, puppy biscuits, chicken meal, or insectile food as used for insectivorous birds. He can also have all scraps from the table, snashed nuts, acorns, wheat, and various insects. He should have a cage not less than three feet long with one or two good stout perches (a piece of broom handle does admirably). Let him bathe on all suitable occasions.

LOSING BIRDS (A. Ellison).—I gather from your letter that you have recently lost a number of your birds, both freshly caught and others. I am inclined to think you have imported some disease among them which is carrying them off. My best advice is to send the next one you have die to Mr. Yates for examination, together with the necessary fee for his report. You would then know the cause of death, and possibly be able to avoid more losses.

BREEDING BULLFINCH-CANARY (S. C. Duval).—If I understand your query correctly, you wish to pair a cock Bullfinch to a hen Canary. If you have the birds, there is no harm in your attempting this cross, although it is usually bred the other way—that is, Canary cock and Bullfinch hen. The birds should be put together to get used to each other at once, and if you intend seriously trying to breed with them I would advise you to let them have one of your small aviaries to themselves. (2) The Canary hens should be put in the outside aviaries in the early part of April, taking them, of course, from a cold room, and choosing a period of warm weather for their removal.

FEEDING A GOLDFINCH (V. E.).—It is far too early to think of forcing a Goldfinch into breeding condition. Yours is even now much more forward than the majority of Finches, and I fear you are keeping him too warm, or doing something out of the usual to get him in the condition he is. Remember, the Goldfinch in a wild state is a late-breeding species, and should be treated accordingly. You might try him again this season with the same hen and another. It is not a difficult matter to run a Finch with two hens. As regards feeding, I would advise you to get our Nutshell booklet on the Goldfinch, and feed as directed, both as regards seed and other food.

TROUBLE WITH A REDPOLL (C. M. A.).—The trouble with your Redpoll is that you have fed him too well, and he has had insufficient exercise.

BRITISH BIRD & HYBRID QUERISTS

should consult Houlton's great work, "Cage-Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual" (2/3); or Part 1 "Hardbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each); No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2 "Linnet," No. 3 "Skylark," No. 4 "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 5 "Bullfinch," No. 6 "Chaffinch," No. 7 "Greenfinch," No. 8 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite," No. 9 "Small Insectivorous Birds," No. 10 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 11 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 12 "How to Mould British Birds." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Discontinue your present method of feeding, and make up the following mixture. Equal parts of canary and teazle seeds, and half the quantity of rape; give him this as a staple food. Offer raw carrot, apple, or other fruit, also be liberal with fresh green-food as soon as you can get it. Dissolve at once as much Glauber salts as will cover a sixpence in two tablespoonfuls of water, and add to it six drops of syrup of rhubarb. Give this in the morning, and remove in six hours; before giving them this, take their water away for two hours. Repeat the medicine two days later. Treat both birds in this manner.

LINETT WITH CRAMP (F. C. C.).—Bathe the bird's leg and foot in fairly warm water, then well rub the shank and foot with Old St. Jacob's Oil, working the toe about as you do it. Give the bird an aperient; as much Glauber salts as will cover a sixpence dissolved in one oz. of water. Use the oil daily until you see an improvement, then every other day will probably be sufficient. See that his perches are not all exactly the same size—have one very thin, and the others somewhat larger.

LINETT ILL (M. A.).—I am sorry you do not tell me how you feed your bird, as I feel sure there is something in your treatment that is not quite correct. Give 10 drops of syrup of rhubarb in the drinking water for one day, and repeat a week later. Make some hot bread and milk, and dust a little powdered bismuth over it, giving maw seed to eat in addition. Then soak some canary, rape and teazle, and supply a spoonful daily. I would advise you to get our Nutshell booklet on the Linnet, and treat afterwards as advised in it.

SAMPLE OF SEEDS (Linnet).—I must say that I do not think very much of your sample of seed. It is badly harvested, and much of it immature, besides which it possesses quite a musty flavour. Such seed would possibly have no ill effects upon birds in the open where they get plenty of fresh air and exercise to work it off. I would not advise you to use it in a stock mixture, but a small quantity could occasionally be thrown into an aviary for the birds to peck over.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

DO CALIFORNIAN QUAILS BREED IN CAPTIVITY? (D. Weston).—Yes, but they usually do best in a naturally planted enclosure, though this need not necessarily be large. They require the accommodation given to poultry, viz., a dry and draught-proof shelter, a dry scratching shed, in one corner of which should be a heap of brushwood, and an open run; if this be narrow, it should be planted along the back with a few spreading bushes. A lofty aviary is, however, the best, as the Californian is almost as much an arboreal as a ground bird, and if the aviary be at all low it would be well to keep one wing of each bird properly clipped, or they may damage their heads when they fly up. Their nest is simply a slight depression in the ground which they line with a few bents. Quail chicks require more live-food than poultry chicks, and they should have live ants' eggs and gentles liberally, also custard for the first ten to fourteen days, but they soon begin to pick up seed, when the supply of live-food may be gradually lessened. Grass clippings, weeds, and other green food should be supplied ad lib at all stages.

FINCHES FOR CAGES (W.K.).—First let me say use nothing smaller than a double breeder without a partition. The question ought not to be how small a cage can I keep a given bird in, but how large a cage can I give it. A pair of Budgerigars would do well in a roomy cage, and, of course, make a fine show of colour. A cage containing, say, two each cock Avadavats and Gold-breasted Waxbills, and one cock each Orange-cheek Waxbill, Firefinch and Condon Hen, would make a charming display and give a considerable amount of soft, pleasing song. Put up three rush nests for them to sleep in, and use only twiggy branches for perches. Another nice series of larger birds would be, cocks only: Grey-necked Scrin (Cape Canary), Green Singing Finch, Orange Weaver, and an Alario Finch.

AMAZON WITH CROWTH (Copeland).—I cannot give you a helpful reply while you tell me practically nothing about the bird, no word of how you feed, whether it is tame, a new acquisition, or how long it has been troubled with the growths. I can only say if the bird will allow you to handle it foment the growths with hot water of a heat which does not cause discomfort to your hand. By some means give it a little honey and borax direct to the mouth twice daily, either from the end of a small stick, or spread on a piece of bread, biscuit, or anything similar it will eat. Till the bowels have been well moved, let its drinking water consist of equal parts of Dinneford's Magnesia and tepid water; afterwards only give this sufficiently often to keep the bowels moving freely without being watery-lose. When not giving the magnesia well colour the drinking water with chemical food. Keep the cages very clean and the bird free from draught.

ARE THEY INJURIOUS? (Shrubs).—The only doubtful one, in my opinion, is the lilac, but I have no real warrant for this doubt; nevertheless, from the beginning I have mistrusted it and never used it. Michaelmas daises, sunflowers, cornflowers, marigolds, and mignonette are all useful in the aviary, both for ornament and utility. I should put in one or two evergreens, say a euonymus, common broad-leaved laurel, and a Portugal laurel; hops and wild clematis are good climbers, and if there are any internal standards supporting the roof of flight put a rambling rose against each. Dock, cow parsley, mallow, plantain, dandelion, and the like make good ground herbage.

FIVE QUERIES (G. H. Leek).—(1) The small green Parrot-like birds in the possession of Italian fortune-tellers are Budgerigars. (2) Yes, they are the smallest of the Parakeets. (3) Their food is canary, white millet, green-food, cuttlebone, grit and water, also millet sprays. (4) An all-wise cage would answer well if it were roomy, say 30in. long, 12 to 15in. wide, and 18 to 24in. high; or a semi-box-type wood cage of similar dimensions, or larger, would answer equally well; use twiggy branches in lieu of perches. (5) They breed freely in cages, but are more prolific in an outdoor aviary, and being gregarious, a small flock is usually kept together in a roomy enclosure, where they are a picture at any time of the day or season. You could breed them in a cage, though they might under such conditions try your patience a little before settling down to nesting. Get our Nutshell, "Budgerigars," 2d. post free, from our Manager, it will tell you all about them.

COW-BIRDS (Piper).—Not difficult to keep once they have got over the journey to this country. They eat a considerable quantity of canary and millet seed, insectile mixture (soft food) and some live insects daily, mealworms, and almost any kind you can capture for them. Mine always showed a predilection for a little ripe fruit, but this taste is by no means general. They also eat green-food somewhat irregularly, at one time partaking thereof freely, and at another almost ignoring it. They are fond of a daily tub, and should not be deprived of it. I have had many specimens, and have had no difficulty in wintering them in an outdoor aviary. I should state, however, that I have not kept them further north than London.

WHAT BIRD? (Curious).—It is rather difficult to define your bird for several reasons. It is a young one, I should say, and not yet in mature plumage, and it is not easy to grip your comparison as to size. If it is a slenderly-built, long-tailed bird, it is probably what is called the All-Gen Parakeet, though I doubt this, as from the head colour you name (it all depends on the depth of the hue) it may possibly be an immature hen Blossom-headed Parakeet. However, if you will kindly make me a pencil diagram of the bird, marking in the approx. length of body and tail in inches, and also divide it up into the various colour patches and write the name of the colour in each patch, I think I can then definitely name it for you. It would be a help if you could give me the colour on the body beneath the wings, and if there are any other small patches of colour indicated anywhere do not fail to include them. I will keep your query by me awaiting the above details.

PLUCKING ITS FEATHERS (B.M.W.).—I do not think the sand is the cause of the trouble, but you can easily make this an impossibility by well baking the sand before use. Once feather-plucking has been indulged in for some time its entire cure is almost an impossibility, apparent cures being followed by frequent relapses. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food. In lieu of the general mixture get one quart each canary and white seeds, white oats, hemp, dahl, maize, safflower, sunflower seeds, and shelled peanuts—well mix and keep a supply in the cage; give very little cheese; it can have such extras as pieces of household bread, biscuit, plain cake, nuts in variety, such ripe fruit as apple, and banana, etc. Also keep grit (put a pinch of grit on top of sand daily), cuttlebone, and a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon continually in the cage. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia into its drinking water every fourth day, and on the intervening days well colour the water with chemical food. Spray it twice weekly (but not during severe spells of weather) with a tepid quassa solution. Continue the treatment for two months at least, and then report progress.

AMAZON NOT MOULTING WELL (E. L. S.).—There is not much the matter; an apparently continuous moult is not very uncommon. Give it in lieu of the ordinary drinking water equal parts of Dinneford's magnesia and water till the bowels have been well moved; follow this by well colouring the water with chemical food, except once a week, when one teaspoonful of the fluid magnesia should be put in the water in lieu of the chemical food. Keep it fairly warm and in as regular a temperature as possible, and guard carefully against draught. Continue to give the cod-liver oil emulsion, as this will help to keep it going while its appetite is not good. As it is very wholesome; let it have as much as it can take. As it persists in taking only certain food it must have them, but try it with white millet and safflower seeds, as the variety will be of benefit. As regards getting Budgies to come on the larger, with an already tame bird this should not be very difficult. Use a piece of short stick at first, about as thick as a pencil (a natural stick would be better), and from this to the finger should be merely a question of time and patience. The two cocks should agree together unless they get jealous of each other, owing to both wanting to be petted at once, or each not caring to see the other petted while it stands aside.

DO BISHOP WEAVERS SING? (Wolwyn). All Weavers sing, and sing vigorously, especially during the nesting, but whether most people would call their song a melody is a question. Out of the nesting season the sexes are much alike in plumage, but the variations of the cock bird are usually more contrasty, the colour of his beak more red, and the hue of his plumage generally a little warmer than that of the hen. In the breeding season there is no difficulty in telling them, for while the hen retains the same plumage all the year round, the cock now puts on (comes into colour) a gorgeous satin-like garment of black and yellow, black and orange, or black and scarlet, according to the species. I do not think there is any prospect of them nesting in a cage, though bachelor cocks will wear nests therein. Several species have bred in late years in natural garden aviaries.

ROSSELLA PARAKEETS (Rosella).—(1) It is quite safe to leave them together. (2) I consider it doubtful that they will nest before 1917. At the end of the summer I should catch them up and examine the underside of the flight feathers, in an adult male they are self-coloured, in a female there is a white streak crossing several of them, forming an irregular white band. It is not well to breed from brother and sister, and when you have ascertained their sex as above I should try and make an exchange with some other fancier to your mutual benefit. (3) You can add fruit to their "bill of fare," and should not give them Parrot mixture. Canary, white millet and white oats are quite sufficient for their seed menu. The other items of dietary you name are quite in order; they can also have stale dry crusts, pieces of biscuit, and a few shelled nuts if they should care for the latter.

COCKATIEL GOING BARE (A. J. D.).—It may be a case of what is called "French Mould," a lack of power in the bird to reproduce shed plumage, owing to inbreeding or some other form of weakness. It may, however, come right in the course of the next few months. Put the birds (it will not hurt any of them) on a course of Dinneford's magnesia and chemical food, giving the former sufficiently often to keep the bowels moving quite freely. Continue to feed as at present with the following additions: A dish of white oats, and ditto of broken biscuits. It will be well while the birds are under this treatment to remove the bath; at the present season they will be able to get a rain bath when they want one, or if your aviary is all covered in then supply the bath twice a week only. Continue the treatment till the end of March, and then report progress.

BUDGERIGARS WITH YOUNG CANARIES (L. Scott).—I am afraid it is a most risky experiment, which will end only in disaster for the young Canaries, for according to my experience the young Budgies are more mischievous than adults. When I kept Budgerigars in a large aviary with Finches, Buntings, etc., years ago, all went well until they began to multiply, and the young Budgies proved to be murderous little wretches; it was not malice, but merely the result of youthful playfulness, but this did not help matters much for the poor Finches, and I certainly advise a separate flight cage for the young Budgies. Some hen Canaries sing almost as lustily as cocks.

INDIAN ROCK PARAKEET (A. G. H.).—The gram and soaked bread is all wrong, but you must not stop them too suddenly; you must break them off gradually and get the bird on to the diet given in the book as quickly as possible. Water is necessary for Parrots of all kinds, but where it has been withheld for a time, the bird must be accustomed to it gradually and allowed to have a few sips at intervals during the day, but as soon as it is accustomed to it again then the water can be left in cage continually. If you were to give it an untasted supply it would over drink to its own hurt. Roughly, the dietary of the bird may be summed up as: Seed mixture, nuts, ripe fruit (any kind it will take), with pieces of biscuit, plain cake and stale crusts as extras. Cuttlebone and grit should be continually in the cage, but grit, like the water, should be given with caution at first, when a bird has been debarrated from the same for a time.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 2/5. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

W. Sawyer.—Canary died of toxic poisoning, due to substances generated in the intestine, the products of bacteria probably introduced with food.

Is a splendid guide-book to perhaps the most interesting and profitable side of foreign bird-keeping. It tells you all you need know.

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, and a leading Expert and Judge. Edited by G. E. Weston and C. A. House.

Complete Bound in Cloth. 7/6 carriage paid.
Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all are considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

WINTER VISITORS FROM THE CONTINENT.

The Great Grey Shrike, the bird on the left of our picture, is a somewhat rare visitor to our shores, and is not often seen on the show-bench. The Waxwing is much better known, as it sometimes comes to us in immense flocks, and it is a familiar bird at our exhibitions. The Great Grey Shrike here depicted won 1st prize and special at the Aberdeen show for Mr. E. Taylor, Glasgow, and the Waxwing is the beautiful specimen which won 1st prize at the Holborn Hall Show for its owner, Mr. B. Robinson, Redditch.

MEDICINES.

Wanted, a trial. We are confident our medicines will give you satisfaction. Special offer to all bird fanciers. If you have any birds that you are relying upon for the coming breeding season that have gone off song, or have gone into the soft moult, we guarantee you a perfect cure. We have the grandest medicine ever introduced for bringing birds into breeding condition. Ditchfield's Tonic Drops are a guaranteed cure for loss of voice, soft moult, slow moult, going light, feather plucking, and inflammation of the bowels.

DITCHFIELD'S FAMOUS REVIVO is absolutely unequalled for giving new life and vigour to the birds, and for producing that smart light appearance of the plumage so much desired by all fanciers.

These two Medicines given on alternate days will bring any bird into breeding condition.

DITCHFIELD'S SPECIAL LUNG TONIC, the grandest medicines ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. Can be given with absolute confidence to the most weak or delicate birds. All medicines can be given in the drinking water, and the birds take them freely with marvellous results.

SPECIAL NOTICE: We ask all fanciers who have got any birds that are not quite in the best of condition to give our Medicines a trial at once, as it is often too late when the breeding season is upon us.

All the above remedies are sold in 1/2 and 2/- bottles; two 1/2 bottles for 1/11, three for 2/8, four for 3/6; two 2/- bottles for 3/9, three for 5/6, four for 6/9, and are sent away Post Free per return of post from:

Twitterings.

Garston B.B.A. has fixed July 1st for its N.E. Show, and Dec. 2 for the Annual Show, writes Mr. R. T. Lonsdale, hon. sec. Will local secs. and others please note to avoid clashing.

I have taken over again the secretaryship of the Ilkeston C.B.S., Mr. G. Siddown having resigned, so all communications should be addressed to me, writes Mr. T. Smith, 5, King Street, Ilkeston.

A lecture on Hybrids, by Mr. Mortlock, will be given at the monthly meeting of the London and P.O.S. on Thursday, March 16, at the Raglan Hotel, Aldersgate Street (adjoining the old G.P.O.), at 8. All fanciers welcome.

Fanciers should book to 60, Paddington St., near Baker St. Station, on Monday next, March 13, at 8, to hear Mr. Frank Cole's lecture "Shall I win if I inbreed?" Those who attend may rest assured it will be an hour well spent.

On March 25, at the Market Tavern, Bradford, commencing at 6.30, there will be a smoking concert and distribution of prizes of the Yorkshire Union C.B.S., Yorks C.C., National Green-marked Y.C.C., and the Open Norwich P.H.C.

We have received from Mr. Enoch Tams, Longton, his 1916 catalogue of birds, appliances, breeding season requisites, etc. Prices are little if any above those ruling before the war, and Mr. Tams says he is offering at low prices to keep his trade together. A very laudable proceeding.

The original drawings of our front page illustrations, and of most other pictures appearing on our pages, may be purchased by readers for framing. Terms for any picture will be sent on application.

The prize offered for the best answer to the question "What is the best singing bird?" has been awarded to Mr. A. H. Mudge, 47, Wilton Grove, Morton Park, Wimbledon, for his reply which appeared on page 129 of our March 4 issue. The cash or books to value, as may be preferred, will be sent on application.

Owing to being grouped up, writes Mr. T. W. Wren, Oxford, I find I must sell the whole of my stock of Canaries, British, etc., which I am advertising this week in CAGE BIRDS. I am very disappointed to have to do so, but hope to take up the hobby again after the war, all being well with me.

British Classes for Yorkshire Union Shows.

It has been decided that at future shows held under Yorkshire Union rules two open classes for British birds will be provided.

IN AID OF THE NOVICE.

In our issue of Feb. 26 we invited our readers to answer any or all of six questions as below:—

- 1.—What variety of Canary is the best for keeping as a household pet; why is it the best, how should it be caged, and how should it be fed?
- 2.—If you had a friend who wished to start Canary breeding with one pair of birds, without any previous knowledge, how would you advise him to begin, and how should he proceed throughout the breeding season?
- 3.—What is the best British seed-eating bird for a novice, and how should he cage and feed it?
- 4.—What is the best British insectivorous bird for a novice, and how should he cage and feed it?
- 5.—What is the most likely pair of birds to produce rare or unique hybrids, and how should they be housed and fed? If young should result, what special treatment would they require?
- 6.—What would be a nice small collection of foreign birds that might be kept by anyone without especial skill, and how should they be treated?

The response to our invitation has exceeded all anticipation, and it gives us great pleasure to find that the more experienced among our readers are so ready to give their knowledge for the benefit of those who may yet have to take their first step in the fascinating hobby of bird-keeping.

It has been impossible this week to do more than to take absolutely at random one reply to each question, but we shall publish a further selection next week, and announce the winner of the prize. (See page 145.)

The Patronage of the Scottish Plainhead Club.

Secretaries of Societies desiring the patronage of the Scottish Plainhead Club should write to the hon. sec., Mr. E. Barron, 119, Montrose-st., Glasgow.

The Late Wheatear.

One of the earliest birds to return in spring from its African winter quarters is the Wheatear, familiar in the hill country, and on arrival and towards its departure on our shores also. Conspicuous from its white rump, it is also beautiful in its grey and black or warm buff plumage, according to sex and season. But there are two races of this bird, and it is the smaller of the two which arrives first, to be followed a month later by the larger race called the Greenland or greater Wheatear, which is only a bird of passage here, seen on its way to and its return from its breeding haunts beyond our islands. Probably late Wheatears seen inland are in most cases to be referred to the larger race, as the bulk of them must pass through later at both seasons. One of our readers, says the "Glasgow Evening Citizen," saw one on his garden wall at Cardonald on Oct. 16, a likely date for the Greenland Wheatear, and a suspiciously late date for any self-respecting common Wheatear.

The Annual General Meeting of the Gateshead C.B.S. will be held on March 18, at 8, at Lockhart's Cafe, High Street, for the election of officials, etc. Having called this meeting, writes Mr. W. Curry, Sec., 6, Roxburgh Place, Newcastle, on a date to suit members their attendance will be appreciated, and a hearty welcome will be given to new members. Any member who cannot attend should sent to Mr. Curry any business he would like to have brought forward on the agenda.

Birds at the Front.

The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds has made in its journal a collection of notes on bird-life sent home by soldiers in the trenches. Men write of the pleasure with which they hear Larks, Thrushes, and even Nightingales singing with absolute unconcern in places where the sound of bursting shells and the rattle of the rifle was heard day and night. A gunner records: "The eccentric behaviour of a family of Blackbirds that built their nest in the body of a field gun which had only been out of use for four days, and during that time the nest was built and three eggs laid. Though the gun was fired each of the three days afterwards, two more eggs were laid. Last night when the bird came back to her nest they were standing to and getting the gun ready for action. The bird sat on a bough above and waited till they had finished." Soldiers who have been through gas attacks allege that they have been warned by the behaviour of the birds of the coming of the gas during the night. Before the smell of the fumes can be detected in the trenches the soldiers are warned by the noise of birds awakened from their night perches.

How I Began
Canary Breeding.

By S. T. Dover.

A Comprehensive Account of the first season's doings of a novice, which should make Canary Breeding easy to those similarly placed.

At this time I reduced the food to plain canary seed, and gave no greenfood until the day before I expected chicks, when a little egg-food was placed in the egg-drawer.

On the morning the chicks were due I found some shells on the sand-drawer and then sung it all over the house that I had some chicks, and later in the day I found that three were hatched. Think of the delight, and how I watched the old lady perform her duties—a most interesting period. I now placed the pure yolk of egg, well chopped, for the hen to feed from with the usual maw seed scattered on to keep her keen on it. About the other two eggs, these I found later to be clear. Never mind; I was quite satisfied with three little ones.

The Menu When Young Are in the Nest.

After the second day I added some well crushed tea biscuits to the egg, so that it was about half and half, and on the fifth day I gave a little green food, chickweed in its seedling stage, also a little soaked rape was added to the egg-food, taking care that this seed was not left in the cages for more than ten hours, or it would have gone sour; in fact when the weather is very warm I consider now six to eight hours quite sufficient.

On the eighth day the little ones' eyes were open. Egg-drawers and all utensils were kept very clean, for I knew that too much attention could not be paid to this item. After the tenth day I gradually substituted the egg-food, and gave some prepared egg-food, many kinds of which are advertised in CAGE BIRDS, and I found this far cheaper, and quite as well.

I kept an eye on the young birds to find out whether they were being catered for properly by the mother, this can easily be detected by their little necks. I was extremely hopeful one day when I saw the cock bird feeding the young, he had been very good all through. About this time I prepared a new nest for them, taking the old one away. It is not necessary to put a lot of material in it, just the pan with a good lining is all that is required.

On the twenty-sixth day I found the youngsters beginning to get to the edge of the nest, they should never be suddenly scared when this is to be seen taking place, once they are frightened out of the nest it is very difficult to make them keep to it again. It is always advisable to keep them to their nest as long as possible, but about the twenty-eighth day to the thirtieth the birds insisted on inspecting the cage from floor to perch. This is a time when they must be encouraged to feed for themselves. Into a small vessel I placed the egg food and a little soaked rape

Singing Contests.

BARNSELY.

Linnet contest, Dove Inn, Donsdale, the first time we have had a late sing, and here it is the last if they call this Linnet singing. We had two members of Castleford Club to give information. 1 min. face and 3 min. 4 in all; 1, Hardman, 106 sec.; 2, Jones, 90; Fairham, 36; Cole, 29. Castleford members thought it an open sing, but if we have an open sing it will be advertised in CAGE BIRDS. —J. Hardman, Sec.

PONTEFRAC.

Linnet contest, club sing, Woodman Inn, Horsefair, March 4; 33 birds entered for 4 minutes' time singing, and some very nice singing was heard. 1, 140; 2, 109; 3, 100; 4, 91. Open sing, March 5; 57 completed, 3 minutes' time sing. 1, 2, 3, Piper. Mr. Piper is open to sing any red-breasted bird in Yorkshire, 5 seconds a break, 4 minutes time, from 41 up to 63, in the Pontefract Club window. —J. Beard, Hon. Sec.

LEEDS.

Open contest for quality Linnet singing, Clarence Hotel, Skinner Lane, Mar. 5; 20 birds sang. 1, Rhine; 2, Wharum; 3, Shared Wigfield and Rhine; Judges, T. Summers and W. Lapman. W. Lapman, Hon. Sec.

Leeds Quality Linnet Club open contest, March 5, "Plasterers" Arms, Skinner Lane. Twenty birds faced the judges, A. Lorrman, N. Solman, 1, Chippendale, 2, 4, Dearlove; 3, J. Lorrman, F. Turner, Sec.

Leeds Linnet and Canary F.A., Albion Hotel, Saville Green, York Road. Open contest, March 4, for time and quality. 21 birds sang for 8 prizes, combined Leeds and Castleford. Quality singing: 1, Wharum; 2, Stead; 3, Chippendale; 4, Bitter. Judges: Naylor and Hayes. Time singing: 1, W. Watkins; 2, S. Morley; 3, Colinson; 4, Wainwright. Judges: E. Wainwright, J. Brindley, C. Scott, A. Watkins. Chalker, G. Worral, March 5, quality contest. 23 sang: 1, Thompson; 2, Wood; 3, T. Johnson; 4, Sissons; consolation prize, Sissons. Judges, Harcastle, Naylor, Hayes. Linnet contest, March 6, 15 sang: 1, Wood; 2, Johnson; 3, Thompson; 4, Stead. Judge, Harcastle, Naylor, Hayes. —W. Naylor, Hon. Sec.

mixed on to the floor of the cage, and it was not long before I found the youngsters making curious inspection with their beaks to find out what it was for.

Teaching the Young to Feed Themselves.

Now I began to get puzzled, puzzles come in every undertaking. The old lady had taken a nasty idea in her head—plucking the feathers from the young. Feathers were flying all over the cage-bottom; some were placed in the nest. I knew what this meant; she wanted to nest again. What was I to do?

This is how I overcame that difficulty. The youngsters were placed in the next compartment, sliding in the wire partition, took the nest pan away, and the cock. The result was she seemed to find nothing else to do but feed the young through the wires, as they kept worrying her for a feed. The young had to be taught to feed for themselves as much as possible at this time, so I placed in a shallow vessel (egg-drawer will do) some soaked seed (canary and rape) and in another vessel some egg-food scattered with maw, a little crushed hemp, and crushed canary.

Crushed seeds help them along wonderfully. They will make an awkward job of it at first, but in a day or so they will get more used to it. I tried putting the wooden partition in for an hour or two daily, so as to make them try eating for themselves; this I found very successful, and at the end of five weeks I found them looking after themselves very well, so I put them into a separate flight. I did not offer the bath to young birds until they were about seven or eight weeks old.

Beware of the Draught.

About the moult—here I learnt a lesson. My little corner where the birds were kept was found to be too draughty as soon as the cooler winds came due, and one morning I found one poor little bird in a helpless condition, trying hard to breathe by gasping. I guessed pneumonia had seized him, and I tried at saving his life—but alas! he died that evening. I soon set to to remedy matters, and put the birds in a room facing S.E., where no draughts could reach them. I did not lose any more birds through the moult, nor have I had trouble with any since.

I might mention I did not try colour-feeding, as I was seeking to overcome all troubles, and get used to the routine. These birds I have now, and have been offered 10s. for the one which turned out to be a cock. I have only related the history of one pair; I had two going that year, from the other pair I reared two out of three eggs. Being handy with tools, I make all my own cages, and have just completed a large flight built to the walls of the room which is admired by all who see it.

During the last three days I have sold birds to the value of £2 6s. through a local advert. I have a friend who has taken up this hobby through my selling him a bird, and this year is going in for it strong. He has the "Bird Fever," and a very pleasant fever to have too. Let any reader try his or her hand at Canary breeding, and I feel sure none will ever regret it. I have found my practical experience through CAGE BIRDS, never once being verbally schooled. If one uses proper methods, Canaries can be made profitable.

The Best Softbill for a Novice.

The Starling.

By DAN McARTHUR (Edinburgh).

IN choosing a bird for a novice the essential points to keep in mind are cost, hardiness and easiness to feed, rather than song or beauty, and the softbill I have selected—the Starling—combines all three points admirably.

The cost in this case need be only a few coppers—a hand-reared one can be had for a couple of shillings. It is one of our hardiest birds, and very easy to keep in health. It will eat almost anything. Add to these facts natural beauty, cheerful, continuous, if chattering song, the power of mimicry, a knowing manner and cheeky familiarity, and you have a bird that is far above the Blackie or the Thrush for a novice. To my mind that is. As a children's pet he stands alone, being so tame and confiding.

A box cage is the only one suitable, and it should not be less than 24 by 15 by 15 inches if the bird is to get justice, as he is one of our most active birds, full of the joy of living. The inside should be painted light blue or green to throw up the beauties of his spangled breast and purple neck. The wire front should have a wide door so that every part of the cage can be thoroughly cleaned. The tray should be of galvanised iron (zinc is out of the question at its war price) one inch deep, and covered food and water vessels outside. Two perches from back to front and one running right across the cage about two inches up from tray and level with the food holes. I also put on a hinged slip of wood to keep the tray in, and make the cage look more finished.

A bath seems to be more necessary to these birds than food, and it can't be too often given. As one of the hang-on kind is of little use to them, the bird must be encouraged to come out and have a plunge on the floor. Truth to tell, he'll not need much encouragement! The cage can then be properly cleaned while he noisily preens his feathers on the spar of your favourite armchair, and a judicious bribe of a maggot will soon tempt him back into captivity again.

Food is simple enough. I mix seven parts of a regularly advertised mixture (about 3d. per lb.) with two parts chicken meal and half a part each of ants' eggs, dried flies and ground silkworm pupæ. This gives an average of 6d. per lb., and makes a nourishing staple food. I steep grocers' currants in hot water, and give them daily as a tit-bit from the fingers, using the water to wet my mixture with, as it is full of colouring matter.

I vary this by using milk, soft fruit, cold potato, boiled rice, and even dripping. "Ring the changes" is a good motto. Of course maggots, flies, spiders, beetles, etc., are all greedily accepted and are beneficial. Lastly see that his tray is cleaned regularly and his perches more so, give him gritty sand, a lump of cuttlefish—and, I nearly forgot, now and then a dose of salts!

The Best Canary as a Pet Bird.

By J. TAYLOR,
(Haworth, Yorks.)

THE best Canary for singing, and as a pet bird is the common or mongrel variety with a cross of the Roller in it. It is the cheapest, is more hardy and a more constant singer than a pure-bred bird.

To most people who keep a Canary, the cage is of more importance than the bird it contains, and the cage must be hung in the window for neighbours to see that they have a fancy cage. Now the window is the worst possible place in which to keep a bird. In summer it is scorched by the sun, it is chilled by the cold winds of winter, and at night it gets all the ill-effects of gas where that is used.

The best cage in which to keep a pet Canary is a plain box cage with a removable wire front. It should not be less than 16 inches long, 12 wide, and 14 inches high, with seed and waterglass outside on the front of the cage, with reasonable sized perches, not the pencil sort which you generally find in fancy cages. The food should be good sound plain canary seed in the feeder, and twice a week a teaspoonful of good mixed seeds should be given in a small pot placed inside of cage.

Fresh water must be given daily, the water-glass not merely emptied and filled again, but cleaned. Green food is required, in summer a bit of lettuce, watercress, or seeding groundsel without its coarse leaves, plantain and dandelion heads are all good. In winter the safest green food is a bit of apple or a bit of boiled carrot, given inside the cage on days on which the mixed seeds are not given. The cage must be kept clean, and a good sprinkling of clean, sharp sand put in the bottom.

If you wish to keep your bird clean, healthy and happy, a bath must also be provided. A penny white ware dish makes a grand bath for "Dickie," and he should be taught to take his bath outside of the cage. This does not take long if you have a little patience. Choose a nice bright day, place his cage on a table with the bath just in front, and quietly open the door, cage door I mean, not street door. Your bird will soon learn what it means, and will enjoy the fun.

Of course you will keep your eye on the cat, or pussy will soon have an eye on the bird. Start with a young healthy bird and keep on the lines laid down, and I think you will have very little trouble with your pet. I once gave a friend a young Canary which was kept as I advised, and which sang up to twelve years of age, and died of old age a month or two short of sixteen years old.

The Best British Seed-eating Bird for a Novice.

By MISS S. RUBY (Cork).

A NOVICE who wishes to make a start in British bird keeping should get a Linnet first, and if he (or she) is not able to keep that very hardy bird in health, he couldn't tend a Sparrow!

I happen to know from experience that a "Linnie" (as the Scotch say) is a strong bird, having had one myself for ten years, and it was a few years old when I got it. At last it died of old age. I wonder would it have lived so long if free?

The proper cage for a bird of this kind would be a "box" cage, i.e., wired in front only; the length to be 16 inches by 12 by 8 ins. deep, with a door at one end. Three perches would be necessary, two going from back to front, and one the length of the cage for the bird to perch on when feeding or drinking.

The best food for a Linnet is Canary summer rape, and tealze, and occasionally a little hemp. The latter being a very fattening seed, should not be given frequently. A pinch of a wild seed mixture might be given twice a week. I read once that "a Linnet feeds on all kinds of seeds." What an accommodating appetite that bird has! Green food, such as dandelion, the tops of groundsel, or young lettuce, is necessary at times. A piece of cuttlefish bone should be placed between the wires of the cage for the bird to peck at.

A bath may be offered three or four times a week. If the bird will not bathe it may be sprayed gently, but first run it into a wire cage so as to keep the "box" cage dry. The cage should be hung out of doors every day if possible, but in a sheltered place if the weather be very cold or windy.

A cold room, free from damp, is the best place to keep Linnets in, or any caged British bird for that matter. By "British" I mean birds that are with us at all seasons of the year.

Foreign Birds for Novices

By MISS A. CHATTERTON (Crouch End, London).

THE following is my own experience of keeping foreign birds, and no one could possibly have known less than I did when I started nearly two years ago.

They have all been kept in two outdoor aviaries, and I have not lost any from cold or disease, with the exception of egg-binding among some hens.

I consider the birds I have quite the hardest and best for a beginner. The larger aviary (length 7ft., width 4ft., height 7ft.), contains white and grey Java Sparrows, Saffron Finches, Red Billed Weavers, Orange Bishop (cock only), Cockatiels and Green and Yellow Budgerigars (3 pairs).

The staple food for these is canary seed (1 part), white millet (2 parts). I also give them spray millet, a few oats, paddy rice, as much green food as possible, mealworms occasionally, and a sod of grass for the Budgerigars. The mealworms are not a necessity. Plenty of clean water for drinking and bathing should be supplied, and the floor should be covered with grit and sand.

By this means I obtained over 30 young Budgerigars last season; the Saffrons and the Javas nested, but did not bring off any young. The Cockatiels I only purchased at the end of last year, but hope for success with these this season.

My smaller aviary (length 7ft., width 3ft., height 7ft.) contains Zebra Finches, Silverbills, Grey and Green Singing Finches, Gold-breasted, Orange-check, and St. Helena Waxbills, Bengalese, Black-headed Mannikins, and Avadavats. Most of these are pairs, the rest single specimens. Others such as Combassous, Spice-birds, Bib Finches, and any other small Finches could be kept with these satisfactorily.

The staple food for these is canary seed, Indian millet and white millet in equal proportions; green food, etc., as for larger aviary.

If kept outdoors such birds require plenty of snug little rush nests hung up for bad weather or night use. I should say that my aviaries are partly sheltered by two walls from cold wind and driving rain.

My own is a collection of thirty-two birds, but fewer or more birds could be kept on the same lines. Either Waxbills or strong-billed birds can be kept, but not together. With the above treatment all these birds have been perfectly hardy, very little trouble, and wonderfully interesting.

On the assumption that a little personal experience is worth a great deal of theory, I venture to write these notes.

Pairs Likely to Produce Unique Hybrids.

By A. W. MEEK (Hunstanton).

IN choosing the following birds as pairs from which one is likely to produce rare and unique Hybrids, I do so for two reasons. Firstly, I know they can be produced, as I have had fertile eggs from them, and secondly there is not likely to be any mistake when the young are put before a judge on the show bench.

The first pair is the Hawfinch cock and Greenfinch hen. In choosing this pair do not, as is the general rule, go for the largest in both sexes. The hen may be as large as you like, but the cock should be on the small side, so as to correspond with the hen.

A Hawfinch in high breeding condition is a very amusing bird. When he is let through to the hen he drops his wings, spreads his tail, and sings the most weird song you ever heard. He is most gentle to his partner, both in feeding and making love to her.

The cage for this pair should be a double breeder with the centre partition removable; this allows it to be made into a flight when they are together, and when necessary they can be parted.

The stock mixture for this pair will serve for both, as what suits the one suits the other, but let it contain a large percentage of sunflower seed, and do not forget plenty of green food, and a mealworm or two occasionally. They can be left together until the hen is ready to nest, when they should be run together only for an hour morning and evening. Use hand-reared birds if you possibly can, and your chances of success will be greater than if caught birds are used.

Having got your birds to nest, and eggs are obtained, now comes the difficult part. How are we to get them hatched, and young reared (if any)? It is useless to give them to a Canary (she would in all probability be scared to death when she saw the young). The best thing to do is to find a wild Greenfinch nest, and place the eggs in it, taking her own eggs away; she will then hatch and rear the young. This she should be allowed to do until they are ten or twelve days old, then take them and hand-rear on the following mixture: Hard-boiled egg, insectivorous food moistened, a mealworm or two chopped up, and live ants' eggs.

This food should rear your young until they are able to do for themselves, then gradually get them on to hard seed, but do not stop the soft food too soon. If this method cannot be followed, you must let your own Greenie keep her eggs, and trust to her to rear the young, but the former plan is by far the better, and one I can strongly recommend.

The second pair is the Siskin cock and Bullfinch hen. Here again we must not go for size in both birds, but this time it is the hen that should be on the small side, and the cock as large as possible. Again use the double breeder, but the Siskin must be shut away from the hen as much as possible (with a wire slide) as the seeds used for the hen would very soon put the Siskin hors de combat, as he is such a greedy bird, and must be very carefully fed.

A good stock mixture for him is canary and tealze, equal parts, and half part rape, but use as tit-bits wild seed mixture, hemp, and a few cracked sunflower seeds, with egg-food, about twice a week, varying it, and only giving very little. He should be run with the hen every day for an hour or so, but while he is with her take away her seed, or he will fill himself at this.

The eggs should be taken away as laid, and given to a reliable hen Canary to hatch and rear any young that may be obtained, mixing with the egg-food for the young plenty of insect food, and live ants' eggs (the hen will use this) and not forgetting the green food. The better plan, however, is to place the eggs under a Linnet, and treat as recommended for the previous pair. The reason I use the Linnet this time is because of the difference in size of beak, both in the young and the foster-parents.

When going in for Hybrid breeding feed as near nature as possible; do not interfere with the birds more than you can possibly help, and do not forget a free use of the bath, this goes a very long way towards getting the bird into breeding condition.

If these few simple rules are carried out, I see no reason why success should not follow, and the novice should stand just the same chance as the old hand. If successful, he will be lifted to the top of the ladder in one bound, and make a name for himself in the Hybrid breeding section.

BREEDING WITH ONE PAIR OF CANARIES.

By A. MOORMAN (Carisbrooke, I.W.)

THOSE about to take up the interesting hobby of breeding with one pair of Canaries will get a lot of information if they take CAGE BIRDS regularly, or obtain one of the various books advertised in CAGE BIRDS on Canaries. A good book to get is "Canary Breeding for Beginners," from which they get good advice and how to proceed.

Before getting the birds, purchase a good breeding cage, fitted with all utensils. Do not on any account purchase one of the old-fashioned breeders with little round holes and square nesting boxes, as these are only fit to breed red mite in. Obtain one with movable wire fronts and sand drawers. A useful size is 30 by 14 by 10, with a sliding wire partition in the centre, this will be useful when pairing and to part off the young later on.

Commence with a common pair of birds, for by so doing you will gain experience before going in for better-class birds. Do not get disappointed if you do not succeed as well as you expected. Keep on trying till you do, as the most experienced breeders get disappointed at times.

Feed the birds on the best Spanish Canary seed, giving a little mixed seed occasionally by way of a change. Give plenty of fresh water every day, well rinsing out the drinkers. Use white pine sawdust for the cage bottoms, not forgetting to give them plenty of grit; fill an ordinary tin drinker with this, and hang it on inside the cage where they can easily reach it.

When breeding give a piece of cuttlefish and plenty of old crushed mortar for them to peck at, this is useful to help form the shells of their eggs.

Pair the birds up about the first week in April; this is quite soon enough, as the weather is more settled by then. Put one on each side of the wire partition, and when you see them feeding one another, take out the partition and put in a nest pan, hanging it on the back of cage or at one end an inch above the level of the perches. Give also some nesting material.

As soon as the nest is completed and you see the hen hopping in and out, you can look forward to her laying the first egg. If she has not laid by the following morning, and you find her huddled up in the bottom of the cage, she will most probably be egg-bound, so gently take her out, get a jug of hot water, tie a piece of muslin over the top, dent it in a little, place her in it, and the steam will penetrate round the vent. Be sure the water is not too hot or you will scald her. Leave her there a little while, and if she has not laid gently remove her and place her in the nest. In most cases this will give her relief.

Take the eggs away as laid until the third, and set her that evening, well dusting the nest with insect powder. If the cock does not worry her, leave them together, but if he does, remove him and do not return him till the young are a fortnight old. He will then settle down and help to feed the young.

After sitting for about thirteen days the young will be due to hatch, so give the hen a little egg food, but as you have only one pair it is not advisable to use eggs to feed them with as it will be too expensive. Get a tin of any of the substitutes for egg food advertised in CAGE BIRDS, as most of these foods will rear from the nest.

After the third day, give a little green food, increasing it as the young get older. Watercress is good for them, and is most easily obtained of all, especially by any one living in a town. About the seventh day, add a little hemp to the usual canary seed, and if the hen appears to be neglecting young, and does not feed them properly, tempt her with various tit-bits, such as a little malt seed, or summer rape which has been soaked. If you find the hen taking a certain kind of food, give her plenty of it.

If by any chance the young get pulled out of the nest, and you find one on the cage bottom apparently dead, take it out and place it between the hands and gently breathe on it for a little while, this will generally revive them. Then place it back in the nest for the hen to give it a little food, and it should soon get strong again.

At about three weeks old see that the hen does not pluck them, as about this time she will be wanting to go to nest again, and it is the safer plan to put in the wire partition to part them off, she will then feed them through the wires.

At about four weeks old the young will begin to peck about for themselves, so give a little egg-food, and as soon as you find they are eating it all up, remove them to a large cage and give a little cracked seed, gradually getting them on to hard seed. If any of them look a bit mopy put them on to a diet of milk-sop. Boil the milk, and pour it on to a piece of stale bread, then squeeze nearly dry before giving it to them.

At eight to ten weeks old they will begin to shed their feathers in their first moult, so avoid all draughts, but give plenty of fresh air. Keep a look out for red mite, as these pests come out and worry the birds at night. Get a piece of camphor and dissolve it in a little methylated spirit. Keep the solution in a bottle, and with a small brush occasionally paint the ends of perches and any cracks in the cage. Do not let them get the upper hand or you will find it difficult to get rid of them.

If you have been successful in rearing a few young, sell the young cocks for songsters, as there is generally a sale for good singing kinds, and with the proceeds purchase a good pair of stock birds of the variety you intend to keep. Purchase them from a good winning strain, and with patience and perseverance the experience you have gained will set you on the right road to become a successful breeder of Canaries.

Correspondence.

A Territorial and His Chaffinch

SIR,—It may interest you to know that I had a hen Chaffinch in one of my outside aviaries which I got at the latter end of 1913, and which I rung No. 75113. In August, 1914, when I was mobilised with the Territorials, I let a number of my British away, the Chaffinch included, and the others I disposed of. I returned home a fortnight ago, and while having a look at my aviary, which was empty, I noticed a Chaffinch hen fly on to the netting. I opened the door and in a short time she flew in. Imagine my surprise on catching it to find it was the rung hen Chaffinch which I let away over eighteen months ago. It may have been the stormy weather which drove her into her old home, but in any case she prefers the aviary to outside, as I have left the door open for two days, and although she flew out, she always returned.

A. JUNOR.

Proposed East Anglian Norwich Canary Association.

SIR,—In reference to recent correspondence in CAGE BIRDS on the above matter, there seems to be a favourable prospect of the proposed club being formed. I have had several conversations with Mr. J. J. Smith, the originator of the scheme; he means business, and if energetic personal canvassing will obtain the desired result I am certain success is assured. As a matter of encouragement I would suggest that any East Anglian fancier who is inclined to become a member of such a club should advise him of the fact, together with any suggestions he may have to make.

Personally I am prepared to do anything in my power to help on this bold scheme, and there are many others in Norwich willing to do likewise. The year is slipping away, and prompt action must be taken if the club is to be formed to operate in the 1916 season.

There is one point in the proposal which I think deserves special attention. It is apparently the intention of the club to patronise other societies' shows in the membership area, in addition to holding exhibitions of its own. Here is a golden opportunity for clubs struggling to keep their heads above water.

There is no doubt that all Mr. Smith has written on the question is true. It would bring the leading fanciers of East Anglia into direct contact with each other, create healthy competition, and add interest to the shows of clubs receiving its patronage.

R. TOMLINSON.

Ringed Birds Found.

SIR,—I found a cock Robin this morning in my aviary which had on its leg a ring marked on the front "Witherby, High Holborn, London," and on the back "633." Lowestoft. F. BARNES.

SIR,—A Pied Wagtail was picked up here, Southcote Manor, near Reading, a few days ago with a ring on leg marked "Aberdeen, V.N.V.571." Being a reader of CAGE BIRDS, I thought it would be interesting to others. J. KIMBER.

Oxalic Acid for Insect Pests.

SIR,—In CAGE BIRDS for July 24, 1915, Mr. Thos. Clayton says he uses oxalic acid in lime wash to get rid of insects, but does not say what quantity of water or linewash he puts to it. I am going to try it, as it is not pretty cages I want, but good, healthy, comfortable birds, and if Mr. Clayton sees this, perhaps he will kindly give full particulars and greatly oblige.

G. L. B.

Does the Male Bird Transmit Stamina?

SIR,—In an article in the "Farmer and Stockbreeder," of Feb. 7, Mr. W. G. Tarbet, referring to poultry keeping, states: "Much as the cockerel has to do with his progeny, he has nothing whatever to do with their stamina." Further, he says "Lack of stamina in the cockerel may prevent him being a good 'stayer,' and may prevent him fulfilling his purpose, but so long as an egg is fertilised by him the resulting chicken will not be handicapped by his lack of stamina. The talk on so often hears of weakly fertilised germs is simply talk."

It would be interesting to learn the views of Canary breeders as to whether their experience leads them to the same conclusions.

R. L. CRISP.

The Proposed Federation of Roller Clubs.

SIR,—Would it not be better if the British Roller Canary Club would try to come to terms and not confine their young bird classes to the B.R.C.C. rings only? Why not let both rings compete in young birds class? The B.R.C.C. could give its specials to the birds wearing the B.R.C.C. rings, and have its ring points competition just the same for its own rings. I don't hold with the split in the fancy at all, but the matter cannot be gone into to make a settlement for this year, for I expect both rings are ready by this, but I don't think it right not to let a young bird enter in the young birds class just because it is P.R.C.C. rung. The P.R.C.C. does not confine its classes to P.R.C.C. rings only, and I cannot see why the B.R.C.C. should do it if they call themselves the parent club. I think it would be better if they will let both rings compete for this season, and afterwards we shall have only one ring throughout the fancy. It will help every Roller club to get more birds sent to make each contest a success. When a man has to put a young bird in an old bird class just because it is wearing a P.R.C.C. ring, it is not giving it a fair chance, so I hope the parent B.R.C.C. will give all Roller clubs a chance just for one season till we come to terms.

Rational Cages for Pet Birds.

SIR,—Following on this week's popular topic of the best songster, might I invite correspondence on "The rational housing of the pet bird." Fanciers are agreed that the hang-up wire cage is an abomination, although to be seen in nearly every other house in the land, and the bird room box cage is, of course, "impossible" in the dining room.

At a recent show, seeing how artistically such large birds as Cornish Choughs were housed, and having just completed the manufacture of a bow-fronted Crest show cage, it occurred to me that something of this sort would be the thing required, if made of a suitable size.

For the show cage I bought a sixpenny wire front, already painted and "bowed," or bent back at the top; and using some wood lying by, without experience, skill, or good tools, but with "patience, care, and sandpaper," quite a handsome cage is the product. It has the approved sloping ceiling, grooves, and bevelled edges, and sides nicely rounded at the top to match the curve in the wire front.

Such bow-fronted show cages appear to be the correct thing for softbills and for some foreign birds; now, if the curve be made rather larger, say to take off nearly half the roof, and the whole thing suitably adorned, and coloured in accord with the colour scheme of the "better-half's" sitting-room, something presentable could be built to any size. A sand tray should be provided, but to slide out at the back. That correspondents will greatly improve on these suggestions is the hope of

Egg Bread versus Eggs.

Does Cod Liver Oil Lengthen Feather?

SIR,—As the breeding season is approaching and everything is at such a price, it will be a great help to working men fanciers to get the receipts for making egg food for feeding young ones which are appearing in CAGE BIRDS. I see that cod liver oil emulsion is recommended this week by "Acorn" in your valuable paper; but I am told the oil won't do for Yorkshires as it lengthens the feathers. What is the opinion of other fanciers?

Hen Bullfinches and Hybrid Breeding.

The Philosophy of Disappointment.

SIR,—I should advise "Canary Bullfinch" to remember that trials and adversities are really blessings in disguise, inasmuch as every disappointment tends to react as a stimulus to further exertions and experiments. He should also remember that the breeding of Hybrid birds is still a progressive art. Wit bought is always wit taught. I feel sure that as he has been trying for five years to obtain fertile eggs from hen Bullfinches he is made of the right sort of stuff, and sooner or later he will, I think, succeed.

SIR,—I have found that nothing beats a hand-reared Bullfinch hen for Hybrid breeding. I had one reared at Inverness, kept over the next year untried, and the following year mated to a Goldfinch. She laid ten full eggs; these eggs were tested and were hatched by Canaries, but unfortunately the young were not reared. When the Hybrids were ten days old the Canary hens seemed to get frightened at them, and stopped feeding. In such a case the hen Greenfinch, Canary reared, would be invaluable. I trust "Canary Bullfinch" will have better luck next season.

MAC.

The Song of the Canary.

SIR,—I have read the reply to the Rev. H. A. Soame's query by Mr. W. Napper with much interest, but I cannot agree with him in his theory that birds, like us, have to learn their song from hearing their fathers sing. If it were so, why are not all hen birds songsters too? they equally hear the singing of their kind.

Apart, however, from this, many years ago I had good proof that the song of any particular species of bird was due to instinct more than anything else. I took from a nest two unfledged Chaffinches, which were almost free of feather, and my father severely scolded me for what he called a wicked act, as he said the birds would certainly die. However, I put them in a nest of cotton wool in a flower pot, and my father made me some egg food for them.

At the time I had a cock Brambling, and as he took such a lot of notice of the young Chaffinches I put the pot into the cage. At first he was very frightened, but soon got accustomed to it, and to our delight started to feed the birds, and continued to look after them until they were quite grown up. Both proved to be cock birds, and both sang the well-known Chaffinch notes in due course, although I had no other Chaffinch, and never saw nor heard one near where I was living then.

Since then I have brought up other birds which have always been able to sing their natural song without having heard their kind singing it. Not once or twice have I done this, but a great many times. I am confident that it is altogether a matter of instinct, just as much as is the matter of choosing material for nesting and site of nest. Birds of a kind always build like their parents, but surely none will suggest that it is because they remembered what their parent's nest was like.

Of course an infant brought up by a Hottentot would speak as a Hottentot, simply because we have to learn all we know, but if the same law applied to birds then I can imagine all birds singing a jumbled up song, and one song only, whereas you may find a Robin's nest and a Wren's nest within a few inches of one another, yet the children only sing like the species they belong to.

CARDIFF C.B.A.

Annual show, Naish's Royal Stores. Entries came up well considering that a number of our members had been forced to sell out through joining the Army, the novice classes suffering badly through this. A pleasing feature of the show was the increased entry in the British Section. Norwich were well up in quality and number. Yorkshires were excellent in quality, a number of well-known winners being on view. Point special winners: Nor., Thomas; Yorks., Bale; Bord., Raymond, also Wells. Mr. A. Maggs judged Nor., Mr. H. C. LEEDS ROLLER C.C.

Annual contest, new headquarters, Griffen Hotel. After the contest officers were elected. Pres., Mr. F. Heaton; Vice-Pres., Mr. E. Peel; Sec. and Treas., H. Best; Auditors, Barnett and Montague; Committee, Messrs. Walton, Hallam, Barnett, Peel, Atkinson. Balance-sheet was read, and although we had a loss on the annual show, we finished up the year with a balance at the bank of £19 10s., which was considered very satisfactory. After a long discussion (re federation of Roller Clubs), it was decided to send Mr. Montague and Mr. Best to represent the Leeds Club at the conference at Manchester. Members elected: T. Elsworth, F. Stones, H. Simpson, B. Whitham, G. W. Cooke, W. Greer, A. Hoyle, H. Roebuck, T. Buckston. A vote of thanks to the judges, Mr. H. Roebuck, Wakefield, and Mr. T. BISHOP AUCKLAND C.B.S.

Pair show, Feb. 12, Y.M.C.A. A good show of birds, which showed promise for the breeding season. An interesting item was a judging competition. Mr. Natrass chief judge. Result: 1, G. Swinburn, a British faneer; 2, G. Hall, another novice; 3, T. Hornsby. During judging a motion of sympathy was carried on behalf of one of our members, John Brownson, who lies wounded in Aberdeen Hospital. A collection was taken on his behalf, and 10s. was put into the cap.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.
Pair show, Feb. 15, Reinder Hotel, Rye Lane. Mr. J. Robson judged. Entries were good, 42 pairs being staged. Quality also was good, especially in champ. Nor. Mr. P. Cole winning special for best in show with yell. cock and buff hen (Norwich). Other specials: Champ. Yorks, Clarke; Hyb. Clarke, Whiffin. Visitors had every opportunity of viewing all exhibits and the attendance was good.

CAMBORNE F.A.

Third annual pair show, Tehidy Lecture Hall, Feb. 19; 49 pairs. Mr. W. Kemp (Redruth) judged, and complimented the exhibitors on staging such good exhibits. Mule and Hybrid pairs were far above expectations, and seem to be coming to the front in Cornwall. Some of the exhibits were claimed at a good figure. The Hon. Sec., Mr. W. J. Uren, with a good committee, had everything ready in good time for the judge, whose awards were well received.

WIMBLETON C.B.S.

Pair show, Queen's Hall, Feb. 22. The entry was particularly good, the best the society has ever had. Quality was quite high-class. In Norwich Mr. G. W. Saunders, of Haslemere, held a strong hand, his well-known winner being on view. Yorkshire had two very fine classes. A pair of very high merit, staged by Mr. Hutton, in the buff cock class, were left out in the cold, although many thought they might have been well up in the class, if not at the top. As usual, the novices made a brave show. A feature of the show was the grand array of Borders; type and quality were well to the fore, some of the pairs being almost ideal. The show was well attended, and was ably managed by the sec., Mr. G. Griffiths, who received considerable assistance from Mrs. Griffiths, Mrs. Owen, and Messrs. Howard, Smith, and Saunders. Mr. Robson judged. Specials: Mr. Saunders, best champ. pair; Messrs. S. and C. Farley, best nov. other sp. winners were Messrs. Hutton, Hobden, Smith, Marriott, Birch, and Howard.

BLAENAVON C.B.S.

Annual pair show, Feb. 17, Crown Hotel; 42 pairs staged. Yorks. were a fine lot, and should breed some youngsters that will be heard of. Norwich were all there for size, type and quality. Sp. best pair, C. Broome, a clinking buff-ck. and mld. yell. hen of good size and quality. J. Howells runner-up with a fine pair of Yorks. C. S. Latham won medal most points. Result of judging competition: 1, C. Broome, 32 points; 2, C. S. Latham, 24; 3, W. Jones, 19. G. Broome judged and gave entire satisfaction. Nor. (14): 1, sp. 2, 3, 4, he, c. Broome; he, Gilbert; c. PLYMOUTH W.C.O.A.

Show, Feb. 15, Club Rooms, Morley St. Owing to so many members being on Government work, and it being a bit late in the season, entries (45) did not reach high-water mark, but what was lacking in numbers was made up in quality. Nor. opened the ball with 29 in two classes, and a grand lot they were. Crest and C.B. were few, but would hold their own in the best of company. The Cims. also were full of type and quality. Judges: Nor. and Cims., W. Spillman; Crest and C.B., W. French, and their awards were well received.

LONDON AND COUNTIES A.C.B.

Annual pair show, Feb. 19, headquarters. The entry was good, and included some excellent pairs; the Lizards shown by Mr. Shakespere were particularly good, and attracted a lot of attention. Special best pair, Bell, a capital buff cock and an excellent partner; Mr. Shakespere's winning Lizards were runners up. Special best pair for Mule breeding was a very fine Goldfinch, with a good yellow hen, staged also by Mr. Bell. Mr. Gilbert had everything in capital order, and was greatly assisted by Mr. Harrison. Mr. H. Norman judged.

CLAPHAM C.B.A.

Annual pair and Finch show, Clock House, Clapham, Feb. 16. The Sec., Mr. T. J. Hose, arranged and conducted the proceedings with his usual ability, and is to be congratulated upon the success. Entries were good, both in number and quality, and the attendance would have been considered good even in normal times. The Chairman, Mr. W. H. Vale, distributed the cups and medals won during last year to those who were present, and took the opportunity of explaining the objects of the association, with a view to securing new members. Mr. Clarke has won one of the Canary cups outright, and holds another for the second year. It behooves members to attempt to rescue this cup, and also a British bird cup which is in danger of being lost to the association. Mr. J. Robson judged, and explained several points to new members, and he was accorded a vote of thanks.

Club Reports.

WINTERTON F.A.

Annual meeting Feb. 10. Balance-sheet was read, showing a successful year, and leaving a balance in hand of £1 8s. 2d. Owing to several members joining the Forces, it was decided to cancel the 10 miles radius, forcing it any distance for membership. All the officers were elected en bloc. A vote of thanks was given to the officers, especially the Hon. Sec., Mr. Austin Bedford. Fanciers are cordially invited.

WIGAN ROLLER C.C.

Lecture, Legs of Man Hotel, Feb. 26, Mr. Kay presiding over a very good attendance. Mr. Kilshaw, Bolton, explained the different Tours of the Roller Canary to perfection, also answered questions as they were put to him in a very apt manner. Mr. Massey, Bolton, gave his mode of breeding, rearing, feeding and tutoring, and gave entire satisfaction. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Kilshaw and Mr. Massey. Eight new members enrolled, making a membership of 50. New members wishing to join please write to W. T. Unsworth, 82, City-rd., Kilt Green, Pemberton, or P. Grenall, 2, Short-st., Pemberton.—Unsworth and Grenall, Secs.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

Election of Officers and Alteration of Rules.

The following is the result of the ballot for officers, etc., for the coming season: Vice-Pres., H. J. Chittenden (151), J. E. Lendson (57); trustees, H. H. Towers (169), A. Brown (168), R. Garnett (84); scrutineers, R. Wilkinson (158), A. Wilkinson (134), O. Atkinson (52), J. Firth (45), J. Harney (22). In the revision of rules the proposition to suspend Union rules and reconstruct, was carried, 143 voting for and 60 against. The rule relating to first winter show was made to read "on second Saturday in October." It was also decided to add two open classes for British birds.—S. Midgley, Hon. Sec.

LEICESTER (Hand-in-Hand) C.B.S.

Meeting, Feb. 15, White Swan, Market Place, Mr. Hulse presiding. Mr. Preston elected a member. Mr. Gibbins elected to judge next table show. A very good lot of birds were again staged for the table show. Mr. Herbert judged Open, Mr. Freestone Nov., and Mr. Roberts Brit.

Cl. or Tkd. Buff Ck.: 1, 2, Moore; 3, Hulse; vhc. he, Day and Sturgess; c. Roberts. Mld.: 1, he, Day and Sturgess; 2, vhc. Freestone; 3, Hulse; c. Roberts. Nov.: 1, Lenton; 2, Layton. Class 4, Nov.: 1, Layton; 2, 3, Hughes; vhc. Pearson; he, Cayless. Pairs for Hyb. Breeding: 1, 2, 3, he, c. Deakin, a wonderfully good team; vhc. Wholton. An interesting criticism on the awards took place, making a very enjoyable meeting. A vote of thanks was passed to the judges.—C. B. Day and Roberts, Joint Secs.

BLAENAVON C.B.S.

Meeting, March 1, Crown Hotel, C. S. Latham chair. Mr. Latham gave an exhibition of egg food making, showing the old method, also a new one of his own, as follows: He took a small saucepan and poured about two tablespoonfuls of milk into it, adding a piece of butter about the size of a nut, and a pinch of salt. He boiled for about two minutes, stirring it with a fork all the while. Then he added sufficient biscuit to make the food nice and crumbly, and it was ready for use. He stated that the birds eat this food more freely than the food made in the old way, and he was of the opinion that it would make hens good feeders. Three minutes was the time taken to make the egg food. A vote of thanks to the lecturer terminated a very interesting meeting.—G. Broome, Hon. Sec.

READING C.B.S.

Meeting, March 1, before a large attendance, room being quite filled. Decided to hold Annual Open Show on Nov. 22, but only to make provisional arrangements in the event of unforeseen things happening. Mr. A. Silver gave a lecture on British birds, which was one of the best members have had the pleasure of hearing. Mr. Silver, after dividing the birds into their various groups, gave migration and breeding habits, following with various ways of keeping and feeding for exhibition, muling, etc. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Silver for the pleasant evening he had afforded members. Mr. Silver, in reply, thanked all for the kind attention given him, and congratulated the Society on its business-like methods; members, he said, must think themselves lucky to have such an able chairman and Sec.—O. C. Smith, Sec.

SWANSEA C.B.A.

Meeting, Mansel Hotel, Feb. 26, Mr. J. E. Jeffries presided. Auditors presented annual report and balance-sheet. The Sec. was congratulated on bringing the old Society to the fore again. Decided to give £6 10s. to the local Red Cross Fund, as every little helps. As for the future of our society, decided to hold annual show on our old date, the second Thursday in Nov.; secretaries please note to avoid clashing. Also decided to hold a series of table shows, the next on March 11. Bullf. cock, Bullf. hen, Greenf. cock and Greenf. hen, two classes for each, F.M. and H.M. Judge, Mr. Ford. Judging at 7 p.m., the society giving three medals for most points. All new members (16 the last two meetings) please bring your friends with you, there is a special treat in store. Mr. J. E. Jeffries will bring a team of Light Mules for exhibition. A hearty invitation is extended to all wishing to join. Annual sub. 4/- Any further information concerning same from either of the Secs.—Rees and Hitchings.

YORKSHIRE C.C. OF SCOTLAND.

Annual general meeting, Nelson's Temperance Hotel, Sec. read balance sheet. New office bearers elected: Pres., Mr. C. Martin; Vice-Pres., Mr. J. McLellan and Mr. Wm. Steel; Sec. and Treas., Mr. S. Wood, 4, Toller-road, Glasgow; Committee, Messrs. Girvan, Heggie, Penman, McLean, Park, Priest, Ross, Pinnock, Gibb and Findlay; auditors, Peters and Cochrane. Agreed that members must show with clear drinkers and Canary seed in cage bottoms; that young bird classes be confined to members of the Y.C.C. of Scotland; and that Committee draw up syllabus for 1916-17. Principal prize winners for 1915: Silver cup won outright, Heggie, 117½ points; special to runner-up, J. F. Park, 82; challenge rose bowl and gold medal, J. McLellan, 34½; special to runner-up, J. F. Park, 28½; challenge rose bowl nov., Wm. Steel, 16; special to runner-up, Mrs. Findlay, 15; most points at patronage shows, Heggie, McLellan, Park, Pinnock, Gibb; best hen Queen's Park, Heggie; most points birds out of money, champion, Heggie; novice, Steel, 16; most points old cock classes, Heggie, 112; hen, Heggie, 120; young hen, Heggie, 49; young bird gaining most points, Park, 16; most points member joining 1915, Findlay, 16.—Wm. Priest, Hon. Sec.

EDINBURGH NORWICH & M.B.S.

Meeting, 142, High Street, March 2, Mr. Charlton chair. New members elected: J. Nelson, Inskip, Stevenson, and Robertson. Decided that the Maile cup go to best bird in hall at the annual competition. Owing to so few members being present the election of judges was left over till next meeting, the night for booking hens. It is hoped that there will be a good attendance.—A. Bell, Sec.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Always Ready)

Meeting Feb. 23, Hunt's Shop, Ocean-road. Mr. J. S. Dixon (chairman) presided over a good attendance, and got through a great amount of business in the drawing up of rules. Decided that sec. write to some gentleman of the town to become president, also vice-president. New members elected: Messrs. Wybrow, Wilson, Cleghorn, Connor, Shearberis. Dates for annual and N.F. show at next meeting, Mar. 22.—J. W. Watson, Sec.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

Meeting, Mar. 2, Mr. Jones presiding. Please note date for dinner, 29th, not as before stated. Balance sheet for 1915 read and same highly satisfactory. Mr. Hobson was accorded a vote of thanks for the able management of affairs. The egg-food competition was not proceeded with, but a general discussion took place as to the different methods used. Mr. Howarth had on view a mixture he had used with success. The recipe for this appeared in CAGE BIRDS recently. It saves eggs, which is a consideration nowadays. Messrs. Joward, Hicks and Wainwright elected members. Next meeting April 5; questions, etc.—E. Sisson, Assist. Sec.

NEWARK C.B.S.

Annual general meeting, Friendly Societies' Rooms. Accounts were adopted, showing a balance in hand of £13 17s. 2d., which was considered very creditable, considering the adverse circumstances of holding a show during the trying times now existing. Officers elected:—Pres., the Mayor (Ald. W. E. Knight); vice-pres., Capt. J. R. Starkey, M.P., Mr. H. A. Colefax, Ald. F. H. Appleby, Mr. E. F. Nicholson, Mr. V. Warwick, Mr. J. T. Parnham, and Lieut.-Col. MacRae Gilstrap; chairman, Mr. A. Wells; Vice-chair., Md. G. Hopkinson; hon. sec., Mr. W. Lidgett; hon. treas., Mr. J. H. Lamb; committee, Messrs. W. Measham, W. Staniland (Collingham), W. Ashton (Besthope), F. C. Lees, H. Stevenson, J. F. Parker, and T. Spray.—W. Lidgett, Hon. Sec.

LEEDS ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, Mar. 4, Griffin Hotel, Boar Lane, Leeds. Mr. F. Heaton chair, before the best turn up of members in the history of the club at an ordinary meeting. The delegates that attended Manchester gave a full report, and it was unanimously agreed that the Leeds Club abide by the resolution passed: that the clubs go on as they are till the next annual show of the Leeds Club, Nov. 10, 11, and each club to send two delegates to draw up a code of rules to be rigidly adhered to by all clubs. New members accepted: Messrs. Morton and Warman. Members then settled down to hear a few birds, and were prepared to give opinions on same, but unfortunately the birds must have known what was expected of them, as they refused to sing, so it was left till some future time to debate on the different tours. Will intending members let me know their addresses, so as to have their names printed in the rule books.—H. Best, Sec.

QUEEN'S PARK (Glasgow) C.B.S.

Well-attended meeting, Feb. 23, Y.M.C.A. Rooms. Mr. R. B. Cairns, chair. Decided to hold our 8th annual show on Saturday, Dec. 2, in Victoria Rooms, Crosshill. Judges elected, and will be published as soon as acceptances are to hand. Committee's alteration of rules submitted to meeting for approval and passed. New members of committee elected, Messrs. D. Keeling, Wm. McKnight, and Wm. McClymont. Decided to hold a British table show at next meeting. Goldf., Greenf., Bullf., Linnet, Siskin or Twite, Lesser Redpoll, hens for Hybrid breeding. Entry 2d. per cage. Birds staged by 7.45; Mr. Mathew Craig judge. A number of specials have been promised, and a good turn-out of birds is expected. New members: Messrs. E. Morris, J. Campbell, J. Brown, Alex. Gentles, J. Carter, J. Booth and G. S. Hamilton.

A pair show was held in another room, 44 pairs in 7 classes. Yell. Ck. and Buff Hen (7): 1, sp. Cairns; 2, Hamilton; 3, Stewart. Buff Ck. and Yell. Hen (7): 1, sp. Stewart; 2, Hamilton; 3, Cairns. Sp. most points, Cairns; nov., McLuskie. Messrs. Maxwell and E. Taylor judged, and gave satisfaction. Next meeting March 29.—A. K. Hunter, Sec.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.S.

Fourth annual social St. Thomas' Schools, March 1. It was very gratifying to see so many members and friends present, about 150 putting in an appearance; many ladies were present. We were sorry our president, the Rev. C. E. Gaul, and chairman, the Rev. J. W. Wragg, were not able to be with us owing to their duties, but were pleased to see our president put in an appearance towards the second half.

The duties of chairman were again carried out by our old friend, Mr. Wm. Robinson, who looked as well and jovial as ever, and the social committee were Messrs. Spencer, Moss, Thorpe, Fairhurst, Oldham, and Boothman. Mr. Wheelton gave a pianoforte solo, after which we had songs from Mr. E. Winterbottom, Miss Hunt, Miss Hilda Winterbottom, Mr. Schofield, and Mr. Seed, a duet by Messrs. Winterbottom and Schofield, and a recitation by Mr. Condit. During supper the music was kept going with pianoforte solos by Miss Hilda Winterbottom, and the second half of the programme was ably sustained by the artists, several couples being asked for and given.

It would be unfair to single out any of the artists for special mention, all being good and giving us of their best. Time came all too soon, and the president moved a hearty vote of thanks to the artists for their kindness in helping to make our social such a great success. Mr. Schofield responded on behalf of the artists. "God Save the King" followed, and so ended a most enjoyable evening.—H. Boothman.

Queries Answered

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

A SINGING HEN (F. Rogers).—It is not so very uncommon for a hen to make quite a tolerable songster, and some such hens also breed fairly well, but whether any given hen is of any use for breeding can only be discovered by giving her the chance to prove the point. You do not mention the bird's age, no whether the bareness around the neck is of long standing, so I cannot hazard a guess whether she is likely to be of any use for breeding next year. If the bareness shows any hereditary trace you certainly should not breed with her. See reply to "Omega" in this issue.

OUT OF CONDITION (C.D. Novice).—By far the best thing would be to reject this bird altogether as a breeding unit. To breed with her will simply be to lay the foundation for more serious trouble with your stock in the future. The following treatment may cure the trouble and, in any case, will alleviate it. Stop giving the egg food for the present, and every second day for a fortnight give instead half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed. Then mix a week, and resume and give it again for another fortnight. In the drinking water, every second day for a week, give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and after this give instead five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, tincture of lobelia, and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for three or four weeks.

BARE AND IRRITABLE (F.W.).—An open wire cage hanging in a window is just about "the limit" of an unsuitable place for the bird, and these cages are not immune to insects. Find a more suitable place for the bird further in the room, where it will be free from direct draughts, and more especially rapid extremes of temperature, which it can scarcely be free from in its present position. Then examine bird and cage closely for the presence of insect pests, particularly the bird itself for the presence of grey lice, and generally follow the same advice as that given to "Omega" in this issue.

BREAK IN BREEDING SEASON (Miss O. Cooper).—A temporary break in the breeding during its height, such as you suggest, though it is not likely to cause any serious harm to birds in a normal condition, may yet give rise to abnormal or erratic conditions during the latter part of the season. Much, however, must naturally depend upon the normal health and condition of the birds at the beginning. If such a break is quite unavoidable, your best course will be to remove the cocks when the hens begin to sit with the first round of nests, and take them right away out of sight and, if convenient, out of hearing, of the hens, leaving the hens to hatch out and rear the young by themselves, which they will do quite as well as if the cocks were left with them. Do not return the cocks until after your return home, and if any of the hens have the young quite free from their care before you leave, turn them into a large flight cage, and have them kept on an ordinary plain diet with a liberal supply of green food during your absence, and do not allow any nesting material or site to be in their reach. It is quite possible that some of them may show signs of going to nest when the first brood leave the nest, or casual eggs may be dropped about the cage floor, but these temptations to let them start again must be disregarded. Throw the eggs out at once, and no further trouble may occur. If the birds still appear in breeding condition when you return, you may re-mate them in the usual way and take one more round of nests from them.

IN WHAT ORDER? (R. Bumby).—I should give the preference to the foods you name exactly in the same order as you place them, viz. (1) Egg and crumb of stale bread; (2) Egg with Osborne biscuit; (3) Egg with cod liver oil food, without moisture added; (4) ditto, with moisture; (5) Egg bread mixed with condensed milk. Nos. 1 and 2 I should place streets ahead of any of the others. The moisture contained in a hard-boiled egg is quite sufficient to make the food of the proper degree of crumbliness for use. Any added moisture is simply superfluous and only reduces the keeping qualities of the mixture.

WHICH TO MATE (Heathside).—As a general rule it is best to mate one-year-old birds with those that are older, but when one has only two pairs of birds, one year and two years respectively, no harm whatever can be done by mating the birds of the same age together. In your particular circumstances I cannot say definitely which would be the best matings, as you give me no clue as to which are buff birds, or the extent or description of marking they have on them. You say the two-year-olds are a yellow and a variegated, but you do not say whether the variegated is a yellow or buff. Then you say the case is reversed with the one-year-old birds, and this I do not quite understand, unless you mean that the older pair are both yellows and the younger both buffs. If, by chance, the two-year-old is a clear yellow, and the one-year-old a buff variegated, and the one-year-old a clear buff, and the two-year-old a yellow variegated, then mate them in this way. You also omit to say whether the birds are related.

BALD ROLLERS (Omega).—First of all thoroughly examine the birds and cages for traces of insects, the birds for the presence of grey lice, and the cages for traces of red mites. In the event of either being found, you should take the proper steps for their eradication as frequently given in detail in these columns. It is, however, not at all unlikely that the defect is of physical origin and possibly inherited, in which case it is not very amenable to treatment, and the treatment should coincide as nearly as possible with the normal moulting season in order to get the fullest benefit of it. Keep the birds in a fairly warm place, free from direct draughts, or vitiated air, and every second day for three or four weeks, in addition to the staple seed diet, give to each a morsel of bread size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, then dusted lightly with flowers of sulphur, and, lastly, sprinkled with soft sugar. On the alternate days give half-a-teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, linseed, and broken groats, and also a morsel of banana until you can get green salads in a fit condition to use, then use the latter in preference to fruit. In the drinking water, every second day, preferably on the days after giving bread and milk, add ten drops of lemon juice, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence. Continue this treatment for a month if necessary. You may slightly moisten the bare areas with sulphur ointment twice a week for the first fortnight, but avoid as much as possible dandling the surrounding feathers.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

WHAT BIRD? (W. D. Gape).—The bird that agrees to your description is the Gyr Falcon. It is a bird of the north of Europe that has only been recorded in this country on two or three occasions. If it is really this bird, I should think it is a young one that has been blown out of its course during the rough weather. The fact of your having to feed it by hand bears out this suggestion. If you are not anxious to keep it, I would advise you to communicate with the authorities at the Zoo, who no doubt would be glad to get it.

LINNET DOING BADLY (J. Booth).—Your bird must have been hung in a draughty place, or kept in a warm room, possibly near a fire or gas, to cause it to re-molt at this time of the year. You appear to be feeding him properly, and the only alteration I can suggest is a little crushed hemp twice a week, and on other days a pinch of gold of pleasure. If you can procure a brand of good wild seed mixture he could have a spoonful about three times a week. This would no doubt contain gold of pleasure among other seeds. Add to his drinking water a course of chemical food, one teaspoonful to 2 ozs. of boiled water four days a week, plain water on the other days. Let him bathe on all suitable occasions.

FEEDING A ROBIN (E. M. Phillips).—I do not quite approve of the foods you are giving your bird, and think you would do better to feed him on a good brand of insecticide food as given to small Warblers and Nightingales, or the following mixture, which you could possibly make up yourself. Powdered Osborne biscuits six parts, best ants' eggs and dried flies two parts each, powdered silkworm pupae one part, meat meal half a part, by measure. Take the quantity required and mix crumbly moist with grated raw carrot or, later on, finely chopped lettuce, watercress, etc., or for a change cold boiled potato, varying it as frequently as possible and adding a little water or milk, if necessary. The Robin will also eat a few grains of canary seed, and a morsel of sponge cake or soft cheese. He should have a few mealworms or small beetles, caterpillars, green fly, house flies, etc. A little fruit may be given, and berries as they come in season. His cage should not be less than 18 inches in length, and he should be allowed to bathe frequently, using a bath that can be hung on the open door.

HYBRID QUESTIONS (Hopeful).—(1) All the hens you mention have bred Hybrids in cages, but I cannot say they have reared them. As a rule, Hybrid breeders keep pairs of Canaries to incubate the eggs and rear the young. Greenfinch and Redpoll hens, if steady, are pretty reliable mothers. (2) The young Hybrids are generally reared upon egg food, green food, wild seeds of all kinds, and green fly. (3) The spring is the time when all birds come into breeding condition. They should be well fed and given dandelion leaves and seed pods, shepherd's-purse, groundsel, etc. (4) The hen Greenfinch is much duller in plumage than the cock bird, and does not show so much yellow on the butts of the wings, shafts of primary feathers, or in the tail.

BREEDING WITH HEN LINNET (Hen Linnet).—The following hybrids have been bred from the hen Linnet: Canary, Goldfinch, Redpoll, Siskin, Greenfinch, and Twite. In breeding the first one, the Linnet is usually the male parent, in which case the hen can mostly be relied upon to hatch and rear the young ones.

LINNET NOT SINGING (G. A. Shaw).—Your Linnets require a little extra attention to bring them into song. Make up the following mixture, and see that the seeds are sweet and of good quality: Canary three parts, rape two parts, linseed one part, teazle two parts. This is a staple food. Buy two ozs. of each of the following, and mix: Gold of pleasure, niger, sesame, dandelion, thistle, and lettuce, and give a teaspoonful every other day, on other days a few hemp seeds just lightly cracked. Offer green food as soon as you are able to get it free from frost. The one casting his feathers had better have a course of chemical food as advised to J. Booth in this issue.

BIRDS FOR AVIARY (A Trying Novice).—The best bird to add to your collection would be a Greenfinch hen; she would agree well with the others, and possibly mate with one of the cock birds, but I do not think you are wise in keeping in the Bullfinch cock, as he is seldom satisfactory for breeding in a cage or aviary. If you decide to take him out, I would advise you to put in a hen Bullfinch instead of a hen Greenie, and then add a cock Greenie or Siskin. With this collection you would stand a chance of breeding Mules, and possibly one or two Hybrids. (2) The egg food as suggested, with green food and wild seeds, would do admirably for rearing purposes.

FEEDING THE HEN (W. J. Parish).—I am sorry to hear you have been so unfortunate in your first venture in Hybrid breeding. I am inclined to think you lost your hen by injudicious feeding. At this time of the year, when snow and frost prevail, I do not risk giving my birds groundsel. At any time this plant is somewhat relaxing, and to my mind is quite unsuitable as a green food during the winter months. A piece of sweet apple stuck between the wires of the cage is greatly to be preferred. If you get another hen and run her with the Linnet, all you need do as regards feeding is to add an extra quantity of canary seed to the Linnet mixture. The safest remedy for a Canary when out of sorts is, a piece of stale bread soaked in hot milk with just a dusting of sugar over it, and a pinch of maw seed given separately. The sulphate of Epsom is not likely to improve matters; a dose of Epsom or Glauber salts would probably have been more effectual. When you get your other hen do not be in a hurry to run her with the Linnet; wait until she has settled down and you see that she is in good health.

A LAME REDPOLL (G. R. D.).—Your bird has probably caught his foot in the wires of the cage and so caused the injury, and probably you are feeding him rather heavily, which only increases the trouble. You did wrong to prick the swollen joint. Your treatment now should be as follows: Bathe the foot in fairly warm water, with a spoonful of horle powder dissolved in a teaspoonful, then gently dry the foot upon a soft cloth and paint it with witch hazel; if the wound is open, dilute it with a little water and hold the bird in the hand for a time until the sting from the extract has somewhat gone off. Dissolve in his drinking water as much glimmer salts as will cover a sixpence, and feed on plain food such as canary, teazle and rape, and supply him liberally with green food. Keep his cage and perches quite clean, and place the perches near the door of the cage.

BULLFINCH BADLY FEATHERED

Your bird has evidently passed through a severe time, and I think it is only the good care you attend to him that has pulled him through. I fully examine him for grey lice, as these pests are sometimes responsible for bare places round the head and neck. If he has them, you must clean him either by freely dusting him with insect powder or hand-washing him, and letting him bath freely in water with a little quassia solution added. During these, the cause would be internal trouble. Give the bird first of all an aperient, of a tea spoonful of effervescent citrate of magnesia in four tablespoonfuls of water. Give him this for one day, and repeat two days later. Offer a little soft food occasionally, say twice a week, and a spoonful of soaked seeds daily; see that he eats these, if not, remove his dried seeds until he does. Give plenty of fruit, such as apple or any fruit containing acids. Just wet the bare places with fresh lemon juice, and as the spring advances give plenty of green food, particularly young leaves of dandelion.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

FOOD FOR GREY-BREASTED PARAKEET (Retlaw).—The Quaker, or Grey-breasted Parakeet is a simple-digger and hardy, so long as it is not subjected to draught, the latter no bird can stand for long. Seed mixture. One quart each hemp, white oats and sunflower seeds, and a pint of shell-pet nuts. Well mix and keep a constant supply in the cage. It must also have such ripe fruit as apple, banana, and orange, also any of our English fruits in season that it will take. Apple is very wholesome and most Quakers eat it greedily. Such extras as biscuit, plain cake and dry crusts will help to vary the dietary. Do not give any slop, table scraps, or any animal food. Water, grit, cuttlebone, and a chunk of wood must be considered as permanent parts of the regular diet. Raw carrot is also very good if the bird will eat it, as also are raisins (of any kind) as occasional change.

AMAZON PARROT DULL (R. W. C.).—You must continue the treatment already given, as this will help to tone it up into condition after the throat trouble it has been through. Get a box of honey and borax from your chemist and give it a little once or twice daily, either thinly spread on a piece of biscuit or anything similar it will eat, or direct to the mouth from the end of a stick. Also give it a little cod liver oil emulsion daily till it is quite strong on its feet. You can give this in the same way as the honey and borax. So far as possible, without unduly alarming it, encourage it to take as much exercise as you can. With returning health and strength, if it has talked it will resume doing so, and if it has not it should soon begin to pick up words, etc. Report progress in a month.

BREEDING BUDGERIGARS (Esperance).—The loss of time is more apparent than real, as these birds differ essentially from Canaries, and once they start nesting will continue to bring up brood after brood right up to the moult, and begin again as soon as this is over, if permitted. If you feed on a mixture of equal parts of white millet, Indian millet spray, also a few white oats and broken pieces of biscuit when they are feeding young, you should have luck with them. Supply tufts of seedling and flowering grass liberally as long as in season. The samples of canary and Indian millet enclosed are of good average quality. I do not consider red millet good feed; many species refuse it. Read the above into our previous replies, and you should have no difficulty in successfully treating your birds.

BREEDING CUTTHROATS, ETC. (Hunt).—Cut-throats (Ribbon Finches) will often rear their young on seed and greenfood alone, but it is better to supply them with live ants' eggs and any smooth caterpillars, spiders, etc., your garden supplies, also a little insecticide mixture consisting of equal parts of dried ants' eggs (best), dried flies, crumbled sponge cake and crushed Osborne biscuits: this will keep indefinitely if stored in a dust-tight tin and kept in a dry place. For use, take the required portion and make it crumbly moist with boiling water, a four-pronged fork is an excellent utensil for mixing. If made into a wet sticky mess the birds will not eat it. Pairs of Zebra Finches, Red Avadavats, Grey Singing Finches, and Silverbills should do well and breed in your aviary under similar treatment. If you put in half a dozen hen Canaries as mates for the British Finches you would probably get some hybrids in the course of the year.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the less will be the sender's.

Mr. F. Woore.—Congestion of the liver.

A Complaint (S. W. J. F.).—You send neither your own name and address, nor the name of the person who has disappointed you. If you will furnish these particulars, and send at the same time a fee in accordance with Rule 8 on page 133 of last week's issue, we will write a letter to the advertiser. In doing this please repeat particulars as shortly as possible. Why not use our Deposit System?

Wild Birds Protection Acts (J. A. W.).—There are several Wild Birds Acts, all of which are procurable from Messrs. Wyman and Sons, Fetter Lane, London, E.C., who also publish the leaflets setting forth local additions to the Acts and the By-laws governing particular counties and boroughs. They would send you the By-law for Glamorgan for two stamps. The close season for the scheduled birds in your county is from March 1 to August 1, and under the local order certain birds are protected all the year round. There should be a copy of this order available for your inspection at your local police station.

WINNING YORKSHIRE CANARIES AT WIMBLEDON.

The two typical Yorkshires depicted in our illustration this week each won 1st prize in its class at Wimbledon Show. The fine variegated bird on the left was exhibited by Mr. H. Smith, Wimbledon, and the clear yellow by Mr. Colin Brown, of Richmond, the hon. sec. of the Richmond C.B.S. The latter bird has won 1st prize each time out, its other wins being 1st Birmingham, 1st Richmond, and 1st Holborn Hall.

The rate for displayed advertisements is 7/6 per inch. Rates for a series on application.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

NOTICE TO BIRD PURCHASERS.
It is advisable that all newly-purchased birds, especially foreign birds, be kept isolated from established stock for a week or ten days, until by their condition they establish the fact that they are thoroughly healthy.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

action will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending this same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

ENGLAND'S CHAMPION SINGING LINNETS.

Have you ever heard Linnets run their notes like Rollers? If not, pay me a visit any time of the day or night (except Sunday). I have a grand lot of quality singing Linnets, all being taught under my undefeated champion of England (cup winner), singing day and night, 2/6, 3/6, 4/6, 5/6 each, also a grand lot of youngsters coming on grand, 1/-, 1/6 each; a few with extra loud voice, right for catching, etc., not on quality, 2/- each. It is well known I have won all before me with Linnets; house-moulted Linnets, mad proud, will sing anywhere, and birds that have won all before them, 10/6, 12/6, 15/6, 20/-; also my young champion Curly, probably the best youngster ever caged, price 45/-; I guarantee him to run reeling a minute into scraping, turn it, and do 50 strokes of peeing, making three turns in this, most delightful chattering, and above all, he sings clean. He will sing in any window in England in less than ten seconds. Linnet Mules, on grand Linnet song, 10/6, 12/6, 15/6 each; Redpoll Mule, full song, 7/6; Greenfinch Mule, 10/6; Siskin Chaffinch, Hybrid, 8/6; Redpoll-Goldfinch Hybrid, 8/6; and the best Goldie-Greenie Hybrid in a cage, price 25/- win anywhere and on full song.

A SUCCESS SECRET MIXTURE.

To make your birds sing at one another, send 1/- for a bag, post free; half a teaspoonful to be given every two days. Hundreds of fanciers are using it with excellent results. My book of secrets, 6d. post free.

HARRY ALLEN'S BOOK OF SECRETS, 6d. POST FREE.

ROLLERS! ROLLERS!! ROLLERS!!!

I have a grand lot of Rollers, singing day and night. No common clappers, no clicks or jars, no high shrills, every bird guaranteed with deep hollow rolls, water bubble runs, harp, bell and gong notes, lovely bass rolls, 8/6, 10/6 each; Schoolmasters, 12/6, 15/6, 20/-, and all will sing anywhere at any time. Hens, in breeding condition, 2/6, 3/-, 3/6, 4/6, 5/6 each; matched pairs, to breed high-class songsters, 12/6, 14/6, 16/6, 20/-, 25/-, 30/- pair. Dealers write for wholesale list for quantities.

I AM BOUND TO PLEASE.

Why? Because I know what I am sending out. There is not a man in the world can teach you more about British and the song of birds than your humble servant. When I describe a bird, either for exhibition or singing, you can depend upon it. The Rollers I offer are the best money can buy. To sit here and hear their low rich tone is simply delicious.

NUTSHELL SERIES.

I have probably the largest stock in England of these books, all 2d. post free. The book on the Goldfinch is being printed, and I shall be in stock of these shortly.

The BULL-DOG STRAIN

20/-, 30/-, 40/-, 50/- per Pair.

The above strain needs no bounce. Their winnings for the past few years are sufficient proof of their quality. They are still keeping up their reputation. If you require proof of this look up the reports of the leading Champion Shows for this season, 1915-16. I am now offering a few good birds bred from my noted winners at a working man's price, as follows:—Single Birds, Cocks or Hens, 10/6, 12/6, 15/6, 20/6, 25/6, 30/6 each. Matched Pairs, guaranteed unrelated, 20/6, 25/6, 30/6, 35/6, 40/6, 45/6, 50/6 per pair upwards.

I have also a few good birds bred from other well-known strains as follows:—Smart, cocky, thick-set Norwich Cocks, 10/6, 12/6, 15/6 each. Grand typical Hens, ready to nest, 7/6, 8/6, 10/6 each. Well matched Breeding Pairs, 15/6, 17/6, 20/6, 25/6 per pair.

Grand Lengthy Yorkshires, including some that can win, at same prices as Norwich. (See also my Special Advt. under Yorkshires.)

CHAMPION SONGSTERS.—I have hundreds of really good songsters, in full free song, at 10/6, 12/6, 15/6 each. Sure to please. Approval anywhere.

HENS, HENS.—If you require one or more hens in any variety, I can please you. Kindly write stating wants. Sib Muling Hens, 5/6, 6/6, 7/6, 10/6 each.

TERMS.—Cash or deposit with Editor. (See also my Special Advt. under Yorkshires.)

Travelling Cages 3d. extra in all cases. All birds put on rail same day as order is received.

Remember This, Please.—I invite you to come on any day but Sunday and inspect my stock, and make your own selection. If unable to come, I am prepared to send any number of birds to any address in the Kingdom on 10 days' approval at my sole risk. I guarantee absolute satisfaction to every customer, or cash returned in full. Send a P.C. for my Free Illustrated Catalogue.

Twitterings.

We hear that Mr. J. W. Metcalfe (Liverpool) is judging at Blarney on August 23.

Kindly notify that 5, Saville St., S. Shields, is my new address, writes Mr. W. L. Smith, hon. sec., S. Shields C.B.S.

Please notify my change of address from 21, Upper Duke Street to 32, Wellington Street, Kettering, writes Mr. W. E. Ealey.

Mr. W. Hook, 12, Lorne Street, Leith, is now the delegate for Leith for the B.F.C.C., and any fancier of the vee gen will be sure to get sound information from Willie concerning the club or the Fancy, writes Mr. W. B. Smart.

At the meeting of March 11, writes Mr. Weyer, sec., the Cumbrian and Dist. C.B.S. decided to open their club radius of Scotch Fancies to Ayrshire. Will fanciers please note? Their exhibition is held in Auchinleck on Nov. 25.

The balance sheet of the Harrgate C.B.S. to hand shows that the 29 2s. 4d. brought forward from 1914 has increased to "Cash at bank £16 6s. 1d." a very satisfactory showing. Besides this there are assets of staging to the estimated value of 25s.

I must thank you for depicting the photo. of my Waxwing on the front of Cage Birds, of which I have been a reader since its first number, writes Mr. B. Robinson, Redditch. I think the drawing does your artist great credit. He is a nice bird and has brought me the first challenge cup for my sideboard.

Millions of Canaries WANTED.

An Occupation for Wounded Soldiers.

THE CAPTURE OF THE GERMAN CANARY TRADE.

PLEASE return Mr. J.—'s deposit," writes W. H. Davy, of Maltby, "and also that of Mr. C—. I cannot supply them. From my advertisement in 'CAGE BIRDS' I had orders for £20 worth of Rollers, £10 worth by Tuesday's post alone."

Such is the kind of letter we are now receiving every day in the week, and a glance at the Wanted columns of CAGE BIRDS should convince the most sceptical that there is at the present time a huge demand of all kinds of Canaries. Dealers are offering to take any number for export, and are prepared to pay good prices. A friend who called at our offices this week, who, by the way, is not a dealer, made the statement that he could dispose of a million Canaries if he could get them.

Now, what are all these birds wanted for? We will tell you. To meet the foreign demand caused by the stoppage of the German Canary Trade. Each Canary sent out of this country means more money for the war, and a better balancing of the foreign exchange. So it behoves every one of us in the bird world to apply ourselves to the task of improving the present supply of Canaries, and of entirely capturing the trade in export Canaries, especially to America.

The filling of the enormous demand year by year for singing Canaries has been for generations almost a monopoly of our enemies the Germans. During each season thousands of German Rollers have passed weekly through the hands of London dealers, and many more thousands have been exported to Canada, the United States, and to Australia, and all this trade is now waiting for England if we will seize the opportunity.

English Roller Canaries possessing merit fully equal to the best German Canaries ever bred have been for some years produced in our country, but the English breeders have limited their efforts to the production of superlative songsters as a hobby. The commercial possibilities seem scarcely to have been noticed, probably because of an idea that the demand was already being supplied, and that competition would be unprofitable.

Whatever justification might have existed for such an idea in the past is now non-existent. The German trade in Canaries is dormant. Let us kill it, and then bury it beyond resurrection. England can supply the world with song Canaries, and in so doing create an industry which will give employment to thousands of her own people. The services of our experts are available without cost. Our columns are open, and anything we can do to foster the industry and to enable our own people to grasp the opportunity now staring them in the face will be done freely and without stint.

The time is opportune, for the whole breeding season is before us. Let us therefore bestir ourselves, and see that the foundation is laid of a trade which will grow with the years. Any man, woman, or intelligent child could make a profit in one season from one pair of Canaries, and this profit could be multiplied according to the number of stock. The birds may be reared in separate cages, in a room converted into an aviary, or in an outdoor aviary in the smallest backyard. The cost of feeding is little, the work is little, the pleasure is great, and the profits are certain.

We propose next week to open a subscription list with the object of establishing a fund for the purchase of Canaries for wounded soldiers, and giving free information on the subject to any wounded soldier contemplating making a start in the industry, and, meanwhile, we shall be grateful to any reader who will give us suggestions on how best to help wounded soldiers to start.

THE POULTRY WORLD.

The up-to-date, efficient poultry journal. Every number grandly illustrated and full of practical articles by experts. Invaluable for the beginner and the amateur.

Every Friday, 1d.

Advertisement Forms & specimen copy from "POULTRY WORLD," 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

The principal article in "British Birds" for March, Messrs. Witherby and Co., High Holborn, one shilling monthly, is Part 2 of "Wait and See Photography," by Miss E. L. Turner. A long list of recovered marked birds is given, and the usual "Notes" and Reviews complete the issue.

On and after April 4, writes Mr. A. Colley, hon. sec. N. Manchester C.B.S., our headquarters will be St. Stephens Schools, Conran Street, Harpurhey, where new members and friends will be made welcome. Our old headquarters, Balmoral Hotel, has been given up owing to restrictions by the military authorities.

A Rare Albino.

A purely white Rook is reported to have been recently shot on the Brampton Hall estate in Yorkshire.

A Leap Year Blackbird.

The Blackbird is due to sing towards the very end of February. This (leap year), in wintry weather, says D. R. in the "Scotsman," it was heard in full song on the 29th day. It is an event to be recorded. There was no mistaking it for the vociferous Thrush of the past few months, for, whilst my ear rarely deceives me, the proof was in seeing the bird.

Siskins in Cheshire.

"F.Z.S." in the Liverpool "Daily Post" says that for three years Siskins have been rare in South Lancashire and Cheshire, although in some earlier winters scores or even hundreds could be counted almost daily in the alders and birches alongside certain streams. A little flock of about a dozen formed the only party he has heard of this year in the district.

Dates of 1916 Bird Shows.

Further shows for which dates have been fixed are: Newcastle East End C.B.S., Nov. 24, 25; Barrow C.B.A., Nov. 3, 4; Eastleigh C.B.S., Nov. 15, 16; Garston B.B.A., Dec. 2; Reading C.B.S., Nov. 22; N. W. Glasgow C.B.C., Nov. 18; Newcastle C.B.S., Oct. 20, 21; Manchester and N.C.O.S., Oct. 27, 28; Pontypool C.B.S., Dec. 7. Secretaries should make a note of these and other dates as they are published, so that clashing may be avoided as far as possible.

The Crested Tit Extending.

The Crested Tit, a bird which has always been regarded as a resident only throughout the Spey Valley, seems to be increasing its range. In "British Birds" for December Mr. Ogilvie Grant recorded its presence in Ross-shire in October. Mr. Blackwood, in "The Scottish Naturalist" reports it from Nairnshire, and the writer of Nature Notes in the "Scotsman" says he has seen it in north-east Inverness-shire, in North Elgin, and in east Ross-shire.

'A Veteran Naturalist.'

Naturalists the world over will be glad to learn that a life of the "Grand Old Man" of the bird world (the late W. B. Tegetmeier) is about to be published by Messrs. Witherby and Co. It is written by his son-in-law, Mr. E. W. Richardson, who was long associated with him in his literary and social life. The "life" of the man who collaborated with Darwin, inaugurated the first pigeon flight in England, and who lived through five reigns, can scarce fail to be of absorbing interest.

The Best Softbill for a Novice.

The Song Thrush.

By R. BLINCOE (Rochdale).

WITH so many beautiful and interesting species that can be easily kept in good health, it is somewhat difficult to decide which is absolutely the best for the novice, especially as some points, such as expense, or trouble, in providing proper food, which would deter one man from keeping them, would be a matter of no importance whatever to another, so that in a general question like this one is compelled to take note of every possible consideration before coming to a conclusion; and perhaps the best way is to go through the list of requirements in a novice's bird one by one, eliminating from our list each species that fails in that particular point.

It should be a bird that is easily and cheaply kept without much special knowledge; this relieves us of all the small softbills, which, with the possible exception of Robins, Oxeyes, and Nuthatches, are all difficult to keep in health for any length of time, and even the three species excepted can only be kept where expense and trouble are no object, this leaves us with the larger birds, such as Magpies, Jays, Thrushes, Starlings, and Waxwings.

It should be a bird easy to obtain at a moderate price, this settles the Waxwing, which, although a very easy bird to cater for, is too expensive to experiment with.

Singing Contests.

Announcements of forthcoming contests in the nature of advertisements must be paid for at advertisement rates, two words a penny.

PONTEFRACT.

Linnet Contest Club sing, Woodman Inn, Horsfall, Mar. 11, another good muster, 34 competing for four minutes' time singing, and best singing this year was done: 1, 3, Piper, 139, 97; 2, Blackshear, 130. Open sing, Mar. 12, 25 competed for three minutes' time sing: 1, Piper; 2, 3, Blackshear—J. Beard, Sec.

CASTLEFORD.

Linnet contest Mar. 11, George and Dragon Hotel, Bridge-street; 48 birds entered. 1, B. Nelson; 2, Morley; 3, Crompton. Judges, Wharam, Brindley, Watkiss, Milner. Mar. 12, 28 entered. 1, G. Wainwright; 2, B. Nelson; 3, W. Nelson. Judges, Wainwright, Watkiss, Milner, and Dobson.—W. Dobson, Sec.

WIGAN.

Open contest for time and quality, Squirrel Inn, Mar. 4; 28 birds entered. Quality: 1, Knowles; 2, Tattam; 3, Rigby. Time: 1, Murphy, 138; 2, Donnelly, 130; Jones and Fairhurst, dead heat, 80. Timers, J. Murphy, S. Rigby. Judges, J. W. Jones, P. Statham. Next open contest for time and quality, Globe Inn, Leigh, Mar. 18.—S. Prier, Sec.

BARNSELY.

Members' sing, Dove Inn, Doncaster-road, Mar. 11. Waring, timer; Dunk, chalk; for 4 min. time sing. 1, Norman, 2 min. 52 sec.; 2 and 3, shared Hardman and Coles, 242 each. Mar. 12, 4 min. time sing. 1, Davis, 320; 2, Jones, 332; 3, Coles, 300; 4, Jones, 252; 5, Hardman, 247. I see in last week's CAGE BIRDS that Piper of Pontefract, wants a match. I will sing Piper's bird, or any other in Yorkshire. A letter to the above will meet with a reply.—J. Hardman, Sec.

LEEDS.

Open contest for quality Linnet singing Mar. 12, Clarence Hotel, Skinner-lane, Leeds; 20 birds sang, and some grand singing was heard. 1, Wigfield; 2 and 3 shared Playforth and Wigfield; 4, Wharam. Judges, W. Lipman and S. Butterfield.—W. Lipman, Hon. Sec.

Leeds Linnet and Canary F.A., Albion Hotel, Saville Green, York-road. Open contest for quality Linnet singing, Mar. 11; 21 birds sang. 1, Thompson; 2, Sissons; 3, Thompson; 4, Sissons; consolation prize, Playforth. Mar. 12, 24 sang. 1, Wood; 2, Wharam and Stanney; 3, Thompson; 4, Sissons; consolation prize, Chippindale. Judges, Hardcastle and Naylor. Linnet contest Mar. 12; 13 sang. 1, Wood; 2, J. Smith; 3, Thompson; 4, Playforth. Judges, Hayes and Harcastle.—W. Naylor, Hon. Sec.

Llanelly Chairman in Hospital at Bedford.

Our worthy chairman, Mr. D. R. Jones, has been in the Victoria Ward, County Hospital, Bedford, for the last six months, writes Mr. D. H. Davies, hon. sec. Llanelly C.B.S., and as time hangs heavily on his hands perhaps some of the old fanciers of that district will be good enough to pay him a visit to cheer him up a little. They will find him just as interesting as they will be to him. I may say that he has always been the backbone of our society.

IN AID OF THE NOVICE.

We are publishing this week a further selection of the helpful articles sent in by our readers in competition for the prize offered in our issue of Feb. 26. It has been impossible to find room for more than a few of these, and we have many more which are full of information valuable not only to the novice but to some of the older hands. We purpose deferring the award of the prize, therefore, until next week, when we shall make a final selection and announce the winner.

It should not be absolutely necessary to devote a great deal of space to it; here again we lose all the crow tribe, and the Missel Thrush, which all require ample accommodation, and are also inclined to be noisy, the last one having a particularly irritating call note and loud boisterous song.

Again, it is as well that it should be of a kind suitable for exhibition, for sooner or later the owner will feel tempted to compare it with others, and it considerably adds to the interest in the bird when this can be done. I am afraid we can leave out the Starling at this point, as it usually gets little chance in a mixed class, and never has a class to itself. Moreover, it has no natural song to recommend it, as have the only two competitors left, viz., the Song Thrush and the Blackbird, and although it is indeed a near thing between them, yet the former has the following advantages over the latter.

It takes up rather less room, both in stock and show cage, it is less quarrelsome if it should ever be desired to let it fly in an aviary with smaller kinds, and it is also receives better treatment from the judges as a rule, whether in a mixed or in the Thrush, Blackbird class, and, finally, if the sweetness of its song does not reconcile you to being wakened up at 3 a.m. during the summer months, well a hen will prove as beautiful, as interesting, and as good an exhibition bird as a cock, and you can rest in peace till breakfast time.

Having settled on a Thrush, the best way to obtain one is either to hand-rear a nest, and pick out the best specimen, or look out for a runner, that is a bird that has left the nest, but is still under the parents' care.

and may be easily fed from a smooth piece of wood. Keep them covered with a dark cloth, and as soon as it is removed they will gape more freely than if left uncovered.

Biscuit and egg moistened with milk is about the best food, but I have brought up many on bread and milk only. Make it sloppy at first, and gradually drier as they get older, until just crumbly moist, and feed every two hours. If you don't get up very early, you had better fill them all up by gas-light just before going to bed, but otherwise they need nothing after dark.

Just before they are old enough to pick you will have to watch them carefully, and as soon as you notice them cease to gape as freely, get a good lump of food on the stick and meet their attempts to pick half way; gradually teasing them on to helping themselves, and lowering the stick until the food on it and that in the pot are practically all one.

This is rather a long job, and I prefer to get a runner, for this saves the first part of the process, but you will probably have to forcibly feed even that: the first day, though if you handle as gently as possible and don't frighten it, it may be fed as easily as a nestling afterwards.

After weaning, the most convenient food is Melox. Moistened half a teaspoonful the night before, and in the morning it will all be soft, and have swelled to double the quantity; it takes a bit of practice to gauge the amount of water it will take up, but you are more likely to put too much than too little; you should be able to squeeze the lumps between the fingers, and there should be no hard lumps in the centre. This makes a capital food, and I have kept all sorts of large soft-bills on it, even without any live food, though this should always be given when obtainable.

Any kind of smooth caterpillars, field beetles, scoured gentles, snails (not slugs), caddis grubs (found in small streams), will do nicely, and when these are getting scarce towards the end of the summer, there are the larvae of some kind of beetle to be found under dried cow dung in the fields. These are particularly useful, as they will keep for an indefinite time in moist earth. They are fairly large, and whitish, and at first can be seen on the top of the earth, but burrow more deeply as the season goes on.

With regard to cages, the bigger the better for every kind of bird, but 24 by 18 by 12 is the smallest suitable for a Thrush. If you have a good yard or garden, a hutch is a good thing, and it is not a bad plan to have a movable partition on the plan of a double breeder, so that you can shut the bird in one half while you clean the other. Put the perches as far apart as possible, so as to necessitate the use of its wings.

If you cannot make the hutch a long one, make it as high as possible, and put one perch high up, and the other low down. Also try and arrange a small compartment for the bath, which also comes in useful to drive the bird into when you want to catch him. Finally, let him spend a few hours in his show cage every now and again, giving him live food from the fingers to keep him tame, but handle as little as possible.

The Best British Seed-eating Bird for a Novice.

By C. E. DAVEY (Dublin).

IN my opinion, the best bird for a novice to start with is a Goldfinch. It is bright and lively, and altogether attractive in its ways, colour, and song. It is a hardy bird, not given to sulking, and is very easily managed in all ways.

The best seeds, I find, to keep this Finch in health is a stock mixture of 3 parts teal, 2 parts canary, 1 part linseed, and 1 part each of charlock and summer rape, of which the seed hoppers should always be kept full. I also give a teaspoonful of hemp daily except twice a week, and then I give crushed sunflower seed instead.

It is best to keep a mixture of titbits made up of the following: 1 lb. maw seed, 1 pint niger, 1 oz. thistle, and 1 oz. of dandelion seeds, of which half a teaspoonful should be given daily, except twice a week, when a little egg food and maw seed should be given.

Ripe seedling heads of dandelion and thistle should be substituted for the seed mixture as soon as they are procurable. If possible, give a little wild green food every day, such as groundsel, dandelion, or chickweed. If this cannot be procured, a small piece of lettuce or watercress may be given, provided the latter is free from frost. They are also very fond of a morsel of banana, say once a week, and a small piece of cuttlefish bone kept always between the bars is a great thing for keeping their digestion in good order.

The Goldfinch is a very clean little fellow, and he is quite fond of taking a bath; this should be given most days in the summer, and every mild day in the winter. The bath should be placed on the grass as early as possible in the morning, especially in the shorter days.

Now a word or two as to caging him. A very suitable size is 18 in. long, 14 in. high, and 10 in. deep, needless to say of the box pattern, with a front of punched bars. The wires should be half an inch apart. This is quite close enough to prevent the bird getting his head through too far, and yet not so close as to obscure the view of the interior of the cage, as would be the case if the bars were unnecessarily close.

A good colour for the interior is a light myrtle green. The cage should, of course, have two seed hoppers, and the drinker should be of glass, as it is easier to keep clean than tin, and there is no fear of rust. The sand tray, which should fit as tight as possible, so as to leave no room for dirt and red mite, should be kept well sprinkled with sharp bird sand.

No bird will thrive unless kept perfectly clean, the cage must be cleaned out every morning and fresh seeds, sand, and water given. The bird should hang in the lightest and, if possible, the most sunny part of the room. If gas is used, be sure and have the cage below the level of the burner.

I may say in conclusion, that I have successfully kept a Goldfinch in a double breeding cage. He was in full song through the winter, so that although the above mentioned is the usual size for a Finch, they may if desired be kept in a larger, but not smaller cage.

Breeding with One Pair of Canaries.

By A. HOWIESON (Hamilton).

THE second query so completely sums up my own initial state as a fancier, that I consider a brief account of my first step into the realms of the Fancy to be the most profitable answer to the question.

Three years ago I visited a bird show with a friend for the first time, in order to give him some assistance in conveying his birds to and from the show. At this time I was entirely ignorant regarding the management of birds. My friend's success that day, and the pleasure I derived from the experience, instilled in me the desire to take part in this most interesting pastime. I made my desire known to my friend, and purchased from him a good pair of Borders at a very reasonable price. He was as delighted to see me take up the hobby as I was anxious to begin. And I believe this feeling is typical of all true fanciers. They like to see others becoming interested in their hobby.

I next proceeded to obtain as much information about the birds as possible, particularly concerning the kind that I intended to breed—the Border Fancy. I purchased the "Nutshell" booklet dealing with the subject, and, having digested the contents of it, obtained "Canary Breeding for Beginners," by Claude St. John. This book, in my opinion, is the master-key to success for beginners. I made myself thoroughly conversant with its contents, constituted it my tutor, and followed it closely. I read various other books on birds, particularly those dealing with Canaries, and never failed to question fanciers whom I met on all points concerning which I had the least doubt, and by the time the great day came—one sunny Saturday in the middle of March—I was fairly well equipped to start operations.

After a ding-dong battle for supremacy, in which the hen came off victorious, the birds quickly settled down to business, and ten days from the wedding ceremony the first egg appeared. Here, for the first time, I disregarded the advice of my tutor, and left the egg in the nest. The principle I adopted was to disturb the birds as little as possible. Although I lost one egg out of each of the three nests which I obtained that season, I consider that the nine youngsters I got justified my non-interference with the eggs.

But I am anticipating. On the morning of the fourteenth day I was up with the sun, listening for the tiny "cheep" I was told to expect, but, like King Midas of old, in his anxiety to experience the joys of the Golden Touch, I was too early. So placing some folk of egg in the egg drawer, I went back to bed to possess my soul in patience. Some time that day the first youngster arrived, and one on each of the two succeeding days. And, curiously enough, the one born last was out of the nest first, a dark-headed yellow cock.

For the first three days I gave yolk of egg only, continuing the usual seed diet, of course, a mixture of canary (mostly), hemp, rape, inga, and a little linseed. Afterwards I mixed ground lunch tea biscuit with the egg (adding the white), increasing the proportion of biscuit as the days went on. I kept a careful watch on the cock, in case of accident, but noticing that he was as interested as the hen, and as good a feeder, I left him to perform his parental duties.

When the chicks were a week old I introduced green food—not too much of it—in the shape of chickweed and the young leaves of dandelion, taking care to leave them lying inside for an hour or two before giving them to the birds. These the parents relished, and gave to the youngsters copiously.

All went well, and eighteen days from the hatching of the first egg the youngsters were on the spars. I now introduced some crushed hemp seed, and kept a constant lookout to see the youngsters pick for themselves. While the chicks were in the nest I pursued my original policy of disturbing the hen as little as possible, and watched for a chance when she was off the nest to have a look at the chicks to see that all were alive. I contented myself with one look each day.

When I was thoroughly satisfied that the youngsters were doing for themselves, and when the parents began to show signs of impatience with them, I removed them into a large cage by themselves, and looked forward to the next nest.

Previous to putting the birds together I joined the local club. This enabled me to meet fanciers from whom I obtained much useful information. At the First Feather show two youngsters from the first nest gained first and second prize, and at the annual show, with a very considerable entry, a clear buff hen from the second nest won the cup for the best young Border in the hall, and was runner-up for the best young bird cup. I had also a few successes in open competition, results which speak for themselves.

Pairs Likely to Produce Unique Hybrids.

By F. ARCHER (Huddersfield).

I THINK the most likely pair of birds to produce rare and unique Hybrids for the novice would be a Greenfinch cock and Bullfinch hen.

They are reasonable in price, and say for 6s. one can get a decent pair of birds—2s. 6d. cock Greemie and 3s. 6d. Bullie hen (house moulted). Of course even cheaper birds than these may be procured, but they will be fresh-caught specimens, and for Hybrid breeding I prefer house-moulted birds. They are steadier, more reliable, and used to a cage.

Having secured my two birds, how shall I commence? I purchase a two-compartment cage with a wire slide where the birds can see one another. As the breeding time comes into season, which is the latter end of May, you will notice the attention given by his lordship to his mate through the wire partition.

As for feeding and the keep of the birds, I have found that a good Finch mixture will answer admirably for the Greenfinch. He will do well on almost anything in the seed line, and with the usual green food, and a little egg food, he seems very little trouble. One can easily tell whether he is ready for pairing or otherwise, for if he is ready he will constantly be calling, and now and again he will try and brighten the surroundings with his little song. It isn't much of a song, but while he is at it, his heart and soul are in his work.

Her ladyship, the Bullfinch hen, I am going to have the most trouble with, thinks the novice. Yes, be careful how you feed. Give plain canary seed with a little sunflower now and again, and as many buds as are procurable, such as apple or any other buds from a fruit tree. When the blackberry is out, tempt them with these, as they are very fond of them.

It is now about the season for pairing up, so I am just giving a few hints about what to do. The novice will ask, What about the nest? Well, this is easy; if the birds are to be bred in a cage, procure an old nest-lining of a Thrush, or a Greenfinch; put this in the bottom of the cage, and the hen Bullie will adapt herself to her surroundings and build in it. If in an outside place, she will prepare her own.

One will notice her in breeding form by the way she goes about her business, and this is most interesting. She will move about to her partner in a most fascinating style, and times too numerous to count will tell you she is pairing.

If we have the birds paired up and everything is going straight, what about the eggs? Special attention will have to be paid here, or all will be lost. If you think the hen is about to lay, shut off the Greemie. Be up early next morning, take away the egg and substitute a dummy. I should not risk the eggs with her, but should either transfer them to a Canary hen, or to a Linnet or a Greenfinch nest outside.

This latter has been tried with success, and I myself think it is the best way, for when the eggs are given to some other bird outside the young are fed on all that Nature supplies. Keep an eye on the nest, and as they get along, say just over a fortnight, transfer to the cage and hand-rear.

Crushed hemp seed, and hard boiled egg make a good food at this age, but as the young develop, use less of the egg food, and get them on to crushed seed. At three weeks they will show signs of picking for themselves, and a little soft boiled food might be added to the crushed hemp to replace the egg food.

To my mind a little insectivorous food is beneficial, for it contains dried flies, ants' eggs, etc., which do nicely for nearly all of our British birds. A young mealworm or a spider will be relished and much enjoyed, if same are procurable. This could be mixed with the food.

In my experience of bird keeping, I have found that the moult is the most trying time of the year, and proper treatment during the moult that leads to success. Our friend here, "The Novice," has, we will suppose, bred a good bird, and wishes he could moult him.

He notices the birds looking raggy, in other words, rough, at about the middle of August. The bird is showing signs of moult, and he should prepare a good colour food, or purchase some from a fancier's shop, the best he can get.

I mix my food with the seed, and in doing so have found that my birds have taken the colour well. Be careful the food is always sweet, and do not feed with colour one day and miss the next, or the birds will come out uneven in colour. This would spoil their chance on the show bench, for, although the bird may be a good one of its sort, the faulty colour feeding during the moult will have spoilt his appearance. The colour food can easily be over done; about a tablespoonful each day will answer admirably if the food is given alone, and some prefer this way, but I have found that mixing the food with the seed is as good a way as any.

I have been greatly interested in the various hints which have been given for the benefit of the novice, and I am sure it is the duty of every fancier to keep the hobby at the high standard to which it has attained. In these trying times we must keep our paper going, and if the novice can be encouraged, then we shall have effected something more important than may at first be imagined.

The Best Canary as a Pet Bird.

By MISS S. RUBY. (Cork).

THE best Canary as a household pet is, I should say, a common one. It often happens that the owner of a pet bird knows very little about its management, and little errors of treatment that might cause illness in a well-bred bird would not have much effect on a common one.

Household pets get too many dainties in most cases. A pinch of mixed packet seeds (including hemp and linseed) given on one day, and the same the next day, as the little pet got no variety since the day before! So on every day. The best plan with regard to mixed seeds is to buy each kind separately and mix them afterwards. Give best canary as a staple diet, and twice a week give a mixture of summer rape, teal, and white millet. Give only a pinch at a time. No hemp should be given during hot weather, and only occasionally in the winter. A little maw would be beneficial when the bird is beginning to moult, and during the moult some nourishment such as a little egg food once or twice a week may be given.

Give a bath frequently during the summer, and only on fine mild days during the other seasons. Always give it in the morning before the cage floor is cleaned out, as the floor gets wet even when the bath is hung on the door. A few drops of quassia solution may be added to the bath occasionally. Even if the bird has no insects the quassia will not do any harm. The floor of cage should be wiped dry when the bird has bathed, and covered with sand.

A pet Canary should not be kept in an open wire cage; they are too draughty. The best cage is one open (wired) in front only, and 18 ins. long, 14 ins. high, and about 9 ins. deep. In a cage of this size the bird would get plenty of exercise, and at the same time be free from draughts.

Green food such as dandelion or watercress may be offered now and then, but in the winter ripe apple would be better for the bird's health. A piece of cuttlefish bone should be kept in the wires of the cage. Fresh water should be given daily and the vessel well cleaned.

A household pet bird is usually kept in the living room where there is a fire all day except in warm weather. Now, warmth is day and cold air at night (or rather in the early morning) do not help to keep a bird in the best of health. A good way to avoid bad effects from the change of temperature is to place the cage at night in the coolest part of the room, and cover half the front with a cloth. This will keep the bird in much the same temperature as it was in during the day.

The cage should neither be hung very high nor very low either. "Below burning lights" we are often told in the query columns of CAGE BIRDS, and this gives the proper position in three words. On a calm, mild day hang the cage out of doors for a few hours, but not in the sun—the hot sun, I mean.

When a bird's nails grow too long they must be cut, and this is easily done. Catch the bird gently, hold each nail up to a strong light, and cut nearly to a pink vein that runs down the nail. If you do happen to cut the vein, a touch of Friars' Balsam will stop the bleeding. The foregoing treatment should keep a canary in good health, and a healthy bird is a cheerful pet.

By A. J. NANKIVELL (Camborne).

ALTHOUGH I am a Yorkshire fancier and a great admirer of this variety, yet as a household pet I consider the Norwich Canary superior to all others.

It is not, like many of the others, a bird of position, and it can therefore be kept in the most simple manner. With very little trouble it can be trained to leave its cage and take delight in flying about the house, returning again at will; it can be taught many kinds of tricks, and often becomes greatly attached to its owner. In addition to this it is not by any means an inferior songster.

The best class of cage in which to keep it is a box cage, the back, top, and sides being made of wood, with a wire front. This protects the bird from draughts, and keeps it close feathered and in good condition. The dimensions I recommend are 18 inches long, about 15 inches high, with a depth of about 12 inches; a cage of this kind gives plenty of room for the exercise which assists in keeping the bird in a healthy condition.

Its staple diet should be the very best Spanish canary seed, occasionally mixed with a little summer rape seed, and in cold weather a very little hemp seed would not be out of place. During the spring and summer it should be given a plentiful supply of green food, such as groundsel, chickweed, and occasionally a few dandelion flowers. Of course, it must always be provided with a plentiful supply of fresh clean drinking water in glass vessels, and during fine weather a bath of clean water should be supplied at least twice a week.

Early Canaries in an Outdoor Aviary.

SIR,—I have a Yorkshire Canary which went to nest with three eggs, and on March 5 two young Canaries were out, and the other egg hatched on the following day. I now have three nice young Yorkshire Canaries in the nest. My birds are kept in an outdoor aviary at the top of the garden, with no heating apparatus of any kind. I was surprised to find the eggs hatched in spite of the bitter cold winds and snow we have had. Has any of your many readers got any young birds yet in an outdoor aviary?

Oxalic Acid for Insect Pests.

SIR,—When cages are whitewashed with limewash or whiting it is a common practice for the birds, hens particularly during the breeding season, and both sexes during the moult, to pick off and eat the dressing from the sides of the cages as far as they can reach it. Therefore, seeing that oxalic acid is a very poisonous substance, it certainly seems advisable for one to be sure in what proportions they mix this substance with whitewash, and also to be sure if it is a safe thing to use in such a way at all.

CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

SIR,—In reply to "G. L. B.," I get an old wine or whisky bottle, scald about 4 ounces of oxalic acid, fill up the bottle with water; shake well before using. I have just finished cleaning down, as we say in Yorkshire; every cage was washed, with a soft brush, with the acid out of the bottle; this makes the old lime boil (get well into the joints), and give a smooth face for the new coat of lime or distemper.

In mixing the oxalic acid with the lime I use about a breakfast cup full of the solution to half a bucket of prepared lime, and a rather less quantity for distemper. I keep the bottle of oxalic acid always charged, and when cleaning the perches from time to time I dip the perch ends into the bottle, particularly during the summer months or breeding season.

I have tried almost every possible or thinkable remedy, but this is the only one I have found to destroy red mite, etc. I thank you, Mr. Editor, for allowing us to help one another through your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. I am certain that "G. L. B." will find the same satisfaction that I have done from the use of oxalic acid, namely, perfectly clean cages.

Does the Male Bird Transmit Stamina?

SIR,—With reference to the quotations given in letter by Mr. Crisp last week, let any rational person examine the matter in this manner. All organised forms of animal life may be roughly divided into two classes as to the manner of bringing forth young—oviparous and viviparous. The former produce young by means of a fertilised ova which is deposited, and the young brought forth apart from the body of the parent; in the latter class the young is brought forth alive in a more or less perfect state resembling its parent, the earlier stage of origin from a fertilised ova being completed within the animal economy. Consequently, if we allow that the male of a bird has nothing to do with the transmission of stamina to his offspring we cannot by any stretch of the imagination suppose that the male of any other animal possesses this power, and it would naturally follow that our stock breeders would be fully justified in using for stock any old spavined or broken-winded stallion or physical wreck of a bull, without any detrimental effect upon the offspring. But do we find it to be so? It is a very fatuous theory. If, as the writer quoted says, the talk about weakly germs "is simply talk," this theory is surely more talk, and very mischievous talk at best. I am perfectly sure that any fancier who acted on this suggestion would have very real cause to bitterly regret doing so.

CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

SIR,—It is very pleasing indeed to note that Mr. R. L. Crisp is still interested in Canary breeding, and his query this week on the question of stamina should be particularly interesting to all fanciers, especially as the breeding season is so close upon us. I sincerely hope that we shall have the views of many old fanciers upon such an all-important matter as stamina in our birds.

Personally I have always had the opinion that unless the cock and hen were both in sound, healthy breeding condition it is practically impossible to produce that innate vigour in the progeny which we all desire, and without which the fancier cannot possibly succeed. Whether the youngsters derive more stamina from the cock than the hen is a matter upon which I should not care to give an opinion, but, I do know from many years' experience that should there be any faulty construction or weakness of any kind in either the cock or hen it will most certainly be reproduced in some of the youngsters. Especially will this be noticed in the later nests when the staying power of one or both of the old birds is ebbing out.

Every fancier knows the difficulties of pairing up his birds each season to avoid weaknesses and faults. Age, condition, shape, feather, etc., must all be carefully considered, and any mistake made will certainly affect the quality of the young birds, and a precious twelve months will have been lost.

It is very easy, even to the most experienced fancier, to breed a fault, but very difficult to eradicate it afterwards. Surely lack of stamina is not one of the least of faults. I feel sure that lack of stamina in birds is often brought about by the fancier taking too much out of his stock the previous breeding season. Inbreeding, too, of course to excess, is another certain way of lowering the vitality of one's stock, and where this experiment is tried the fancier should carefully mark each youngster and throw out any that show the slightest weakness.

I should like to read Mr. R. L. Crisp's own views on this matter, and I am sure his experience would be most valuable.

Hen Bullfinches and Hybrid Breeding.

SIR,—Re the letter from "Canary-Bullfinch" about getting fertile eggs from the hen Bullfinch and bringing early into breeding condition, may I, as a great lover of this bird, say a few words? I have never been without two or more Bullfinches during the last ten years, and have bred with them pretty well every season. If "Canary-Bullfinch" has tried them for five years, and had no fertile eggs, there must be something wrong with the treatment. In the first place, it is, in my opinion, a great mistake to try and push the hen forward. The thing to do rather is to keep her back until one is quite sure that the cocks are ready. The time to get fertile eggs from Britishers in captivity is July and August, and especially this would apply if trying with Goldfinches, as they are late breeders.

By bringing your hens forward early you are only asking for nests of unfertile eggs, which, needless to say, wears the hen out to no purpose. Once a hen Bullfinch starts laying, she goes on with nest after nest until the moult comes on, and unless she is in good form the moult claims her as a victim. There is no doubt about this.

If breeding with a Canary cock, the above statements must be modified to a certain extent, but my advice would be to keep the cock back, and take the nests as late as possible. As regards running the cock out and in, I think this is nonsense with a Bullfinch hen, as it is only likely to excite her, and "put her off." Bullfinches are "lost" without their mates during the breeding season, and simply spend their time in calling for them instead of attending to their domestic duties.

I recommend that the surroundings should be as natural as possible. Let the Bullfinch build her own nest, and lay in it, if feasible. I have had them do this in a large cage with a small shrub in a pot inside. In this way I once got a nest of seven eggs, all fertile, but this was in August, with a pair of very tame Bullfinches. I usually breed them in a large aviary. There must be plenty of green food going—chickweed and shepherd's purse, and a few dandelion shoots, buds, fruit, etc., thistles, and so on for the Goldfinch, plenty of bathing and plenty of room, and if the birds are really paired, the cock seen to be feeding the hen, and so on, there should certainly be some fertile eggs obtained.

I hope "Canary-Bullfinch" will let us know if he does have any luck after this.

The Y.C.C. of Scotland's New Rules.

SIR,—I see by the report in CAGE BIRDS that members must now show with clear drinkers. I take that to mean glass drinkers, as used on Border Fancy show cages.

Uniformity apparently being the object in view, could not the standard Yorkshire Union show cage be adopted? Then you would have all cages, perches, and drinkers alike; perhaps with advantage to the lesser lights in the Fancy.

The rule that young bird classes at patronage shows be confined to Y.C.C. of Scotland members may compulsorily enlist a few new members, as presumably intended, but debars our English brothers, who invariably patronised these classes at our open shows.

Might I take this opportunity of asking what the above club proposes to do for the novice Yorkie breeders this season?

FORWARD.

Proposed Federation of Roller Clubs.

SIR,—In reply to the letter in CAGE BIRDS, Mar. 11, the B.R.C.C. are trying to smooth things all round, so that all the clubs shall once more be working in harmony together; all that is required is a little give and take to make the whole fancy united again.

The following suggestions I have sent to all secretaries of Roller Clubs to bring before their members:—That the B.R.C.C. recognise the P.R.C.C. rings for this season at all shows, on the understanding that only one ring be used in future. That the B.R.C.C. patronage be given to all shows. That societies receiving the B.R.C.C. patronage print in the schedule the judges' names and the classes they are to judge. That the B.R.C.C. annual show be held outside London for a series of years at different places, also the annual general meeting when possible. That as the present scheme of having the different secretaries of roller clubs as vice-presidents, to report the various doings of their societies, has not been a success, the secretaries, by virtue of their office, be committeemen, and according to the strength of each society they to elect extra committeemen. All matters of importance to be submitted to each society and voted on by the committee.

In making these suggestions I sincerely trust that all of us will let bygones be bygones, and try and come to an understanding that will be satisfactory to all parties.

J. W. NORRIS.

SIR,—I have been a close follower of the above discussion in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. That there should be complete unity between all Roller clubs is most desirable, but the procedure pursued by some of the branches to attain that object, is, to my unbiassed mind, both selfish and dictatorial.

The Roller Fancy owes everything to the parent club, B.R.C.C. who, I dare say, are many "ups and downs" until they secured the necessary subscribers to keep the club out of financial difficulties.

We all have our grievances, but would it not be more effective if, instead of creating discord throughout the Fancy, for those fanciers who think they are not treated properly by the B.R.C.C. Control Board, to subscribe to the B.R.C.C.? This course would give them a voice at the next general meeting, enable them to present their proposals, and, if necessary, put forward their own representatives to sit on the Board of Control.

That this is the best and more straightforward way to smooth out all differences now existing between the clubs, as well as for the advancement of the Roller Canary Fancy, is the humble opinion of a B.R.C.C. member.

Does Cod Liver Oil Lengthen Feather?

SIR,—I have not noticed any ill effect from the use of cod liver oil, and I think the good which comes from the use of a little will far outweigh what little may be caused in the way of length of feather. For myself, I fail to see what harm will be caused by length of feather through feeding the young in the manner I stated, as the whole of the body feathers will be cast off at the first moult, and if no oil is used during the moult, where will the harm come from? I am quite aware that Yorkshires should have short, hard body feather, and if that class of feather is on the birds in the natural order of things, I don't think a little cod liver oil will have any ill effects, even if used during the moulting season.

I hope other fanciers will let us have their opinions on the use of same. I am only a young fancier myself, and am quite willing to be taught by older fanciers. In my method of using the egg-bread I see I state 1 part sugar; this should be half-part sugar—please correct.

ACORN.

The Disputed Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Simons, I may say I was the first to have the privilege of adjudicating where one of these birds was exhibited, and that was at the First Feather show of the Darvel O.B.C. in August. I examined it very carefully, and had no hesitation in accepting it as a Hybrid, which it was claimed to be. In its nest-feather, its colour and markings were about intermediate between a young Thrush and a young Blackbird, and even at that early age its actions showed unmistakable evidence of the Blackbird.

I did not see the bird again till the Darvel show in November, when Mr. Anderson had two on exhibition, one of them having been placed first by Mr. Peter McQuiston. The above bird was then clean moulted, and I was surprised how much it resembled its male parent in breast markings. Its back and tail, however, were more smoky in colour than a Thrush's, also the latter was perceptibly larger than that of a Song Thrush, and the bird occasionally jerked it open in true Blackbird style. I also heard it utter the familiar Blackbird "chuck."

As young cock Blackbirds do not come into full adult colour till well on in the spring, then developing the ochre beak and eye-ceres; it should not be expected that Hybrids off the Blackbird would show traces of these before that time; but when these are fully developed the parentage of the birds should be beyond dispute, the yellow beak and eye-ceres being the hall mark of a genuine Blackbird Hybrid.

CAVIN ALSTON.

SIR,—I am pleased to know that Mr. Simons seems to believe I am making an honest claim for my birds, and I trust that, as he suggests, other fanciers will do the same. I showed one at Carlisle under Mr. Robson, and it was put out. Then the same bird was sent to Brechin, under Mr. Watson I think, and was placed 3rd. One was sent to Glasgow under Mr. M. Craig and was placed 7th (see Mr. Craig's letter in CAGE BIRDS some time ago). Then two of them were shown at Darvel under Mr. McQuiston, who placed them 1st and 5th. Then lastly the three were sent to the Holborn Hall show last month under Mr. Robson again, who still adheres to his old position, declaring that he knows they are not Hybrids at all.

Mr. Simons says I don't seem to be afraid to show the birds. Why should I, knowing them to be genuine? I trust the time may come when the only one who has condemned them may find himself under the necessity of taking back much that he has said against them.

TRELAWNEY DIE?

Then Thirty Thousand
Cornishmen will know the Reason Why."

THE CORNISH CHOUGH IS THREATENED WITH EXTINCTION.

Shall such a beautiful Bird be allowed to perish? The magnificent specimen depicted in the above drawing by M. Goodchild is the property of Mr. C. G. Taylor, of Cambridge, and has graced our show benches on twenty-four occasions. It has won twenty-three first prizes, its wins last season including 1st and Special Holborn Hall, 1st and Special Cambridge, 1st and Special Sheffield, and 1st at Coventry.

MEDICINES.

EVERY BIRDKEEPER has need of practical hints upon the prevention of diseases and their eradication from cage, aviary, and birdroom. These are to be found in "Nuttall's No. 9," post free 2d., from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d., from our agents (list published frequently).

"AVEAU"

This preparation of Kreyodyne added to drinking water cures affections of the breathing and digestive organs, and is an excellent tonic, 1/- Address:—

W. Vale, F.Z.S., Q.M.C. Dispensary Bird Hospital, South Norwood, London.

SOFT MOULT. NOT SINGING.

Wanted, a trial. We are confident our medicines will give you satisfaction. Special offer to all bird fanciers. If you have any birds that you are relying upon for the coming breeding season that have gone off song, or have gone into the soft moult, we guarantee you a perfect cure.

We have the grandest medicine ever introduced for bringing birds into breeding condition.

DITCHFIELD'S Tonic Drops are a guaranteed cure for loss of voice, soft moult, slow moult, going light, feather plucking, and inflammation of the bowels.

DITCHFIELD'S FAMOUS REVIVO

is absolutely unequalled for giving new life and vigour to the birds, and for producing that smart tight appearance of the plumage so much desired by all fanciers.

These two Medicines given on alternate days will bring any bird into breeding condition.

DITCHFIELD'S SPECIAL LUNG TONIC, the grandest medicines ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. Can be given with absolute confidence to the most weak or delicate birds. All medicines can be given in the drinking water, and the birds take them freely with marvellous results.

SPECIAL NOTICE:

We ask all fanciers who have got any birds that are not quite in the best of condition to give our Medicines a trial at once, as it is often too late when the breeding season is upon us.

All the above remedies are sold in 1/2 and 2/2 bottles; two 1/2 bottles for 1/1, three for 2/8, four for 3/6, two 2/2 bottles for 3/9, three for 5/6, four for 6/9. P.S.—Owing to the scarcity of glass bottles we are unable to get the 8d. size to sell retail, but would like customers to know that the 1/2 bottles are treble size the 8d. bottles. All orders are sent away POST FREE per return from:—

GENT'S AND BOYS' SUITS FREE!

Astounding Easter Offer for a few weeks only to "Cage Birds" Readers! Send only a post card and save pounds.

Now readers, would you like a suit or pair of trousers absolutely free? Perhaps your boy also? A most astounding offer is being made by a well-known London firm! They have discovered a remarkable Holeproof Cloth. You can't tear it! Yet it looks just the same as £3 or £4 suitings. You can't wear it out, no matter how hard you wear it, for if during six months of solid hard grinding work every day of the week (not just Sundays), you wear the smallest hole, another garment will be given free! The firm will send a written guarantee in every parcel. Think, readers, just 15s. 3d. for a man's suit, and only 4s. 9d. for a pair of trousers, or boy's suit 5s. 11d., knickers 2s. 3d., guaranteed for six months' solid grinding wear, and replaced free of charge if hole appears.

The Cloth.

As previously stated, this really marvellous cloth is absolutely untearable—you cannot tear it, no matter how hard you try; but possibly the thought arises that being of such hard-wearing quality, it must resemble in some shape or form the ordinary old-fashioned cord. That is not so. Side by side with the very latest designs in tweeds, and the best of our fancy worsteds, readers without testing the cloth would be unable to say which was holeproof and which was ordinary tweed. It is absolutely identical in appearance, and for considerably less than a sovereign, it is possible to obtain the design and colouring which in ordinary tweeds could not be procured under £3 or £4. The designs are suitable for office and best wear and field or rough wear, so that readers, whether at work or at leisure, need have no hesitation in wearing garments made from this remarkable cloth. The cloth could not be torn by a barbed wire fence, it is quite impossible to tear it, and the manufacturers predict that just as soon as the public learn of its remarkable wearing qualities, ordinary tweeds and serges will become a thing of the past. For your boys it is the very cloth.

Prices Extraordinary.

The prices of garments in this holeproof cloth are truly remarkable—of course, they are cut very low, more or less, to induce the public to test the cloth. It is possible to procure a really well-cut, smartly-finished suit consisting of jacket, vest, and trousers for the absurd sum of 15s. 3d., whilst a pair of trousers guaranteed for six months' solid hard wear could be obtained for merely 4s. 9d., or gent's riding, cycling, or walking breeches for 6s. 3d. Boys' Suits from 5/11, knickers 2/3.

Method in Making.

Readers naturally ask the question, can these goods be well made for the money? Here again is the result of the employment of modern methods and machinery, the outcome of years of experimentation, which have rendered it possible to supply a suit of clothes for 15s. 3d., which our grandfathers could not possibly have obtained at anything like treble the price. As an instance of the labour-saving devices, it must be mentioned that every sewing machine used in the making of these garments is driven by electric power; no work except the actual guidance of the garments through the machine falls on the worker, with the result that double and treble the quantity of garments can be turned out with absolute assurance that every garment is really well made. This is one instance of how the method carried from the beginning to the end of the business has resulted in a better and cheaper article for the public.

The Result.

Readers would do well to investigate this offer at once, before the rush, and the result to themselves will be a considerable saving of money in their tailoring bills, besides being able to wear garments made from a cloth which looks really smart, and yet will wear even better than the ordinary common cords.

Generous Free Samples for Readers.

To induce readers to give this remarkable cloth a trial, the manufacturers offer to send (if readers will send merely a 1d. postcard asking for free samples) a generous supply of cloth cuttings, fashions, and a most remarkable measurement chart, which will enable readers to measure themselves as well as any tailor could measure them. This will be sent absolutely free of charge by return of post. Readers must not delay a day, but should study the advertisement beneath, and send a postcard for the free samples of cloth cuttings. Remember, send now, while prices remain low.

The Breeding Season is Approaching

The end of March is soon enough to pair up.

In the meantime clean, disinfect, and renovate all breeding cages and appliances.

Move the hens into their breeding cages as soon as these are ready, to get them accustomed to their quarters before pairing up time.

EVERY GARMENT GUARANTEED TO WEAR SIX MONTHS OR REPLACED FREE.

Remarkable Cloth—Won't Tear—Won't Wear Out—Absolutely Holeproof! Your Boy must have a Suit!

We will give any reader a pair of Trousers, Breeches, or complete Suit, free of charge, if he can wear the smallest hole in six months, no matter how hard he wears goods. We have discovered a really remarkable cloth that will not tear or wear out—absolutely holeproof, looks exactly as finest tweeds and serges, made in all the most up-to-date designs and suitable for farm and rough wear or office and best wear. Just to introduce this remarkable cloth to "Cage Birds" readers we offer a pair of well-cut Gent's Trousers for only 4/9; Breeches 6/3, or complete stylish suit for 15/3, BOY'S SUIT for 5/11, Knickers 2/3, and send in parcel a guarantee, plainly stating if the smallest hole appears in six months (no matter how hard you wear goods) we replace the garment absolutely free of charge. Send 4/9 and 4d. postage, together with waist and leg measures, and state colour, for sample pair of Trousers (Breeches 6/7 post free).

NOTICE TO READERS OF "CAGE BIRDS":

Do not send money in advance to any dealer on the Continent. My own experience has been: Firstly, in sending to France, money was detained there 14 days with no sending of stock; to Holland, after depositing money with the Railway Company and being promised 500 hens weekly, no birds could be obtained. This venture cost forty shillings in expenses—absolutely wasted.

Twitterings.

Mr. Geo. Cubley writes that he has removed from Lutton Gwots to Claxton's Grove, near Long Sutton, Lincs.

The Countess of Duncannon, Gwyrch Castle, Abergale, has become President of the Welsh Northern Counties F. and F.A.

Sheffield fanciers should not forget the Sheffield C.B.S. dinner on Mar. 29, at the Arcade, Ecclesall Road, at 7.30.

Mr. J. G. Hutchinson, vice-chairman Newcastle East End C.B.S., writes that the secretary, Mr. J. W. Cotts, has enlisted in the Royal Engineers. He has been transferred to Silkeston, near Barnsley, Yorks.

Mr. M. S. Rindham writes that in the Amateur Yorks buff cock and yellow hen class at the show of the City and Suburban A.C.B. he took 2nd prize, and Mr. Hammarford 1st and 3rd. The awards in this class were not included in our report.

Allow me to thank the 57 voters who gave their votes on my behalf as vice-president of the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S., writes Mr. J. E. Hudson, and also to extend my good wishes to the successful candidate, Mr. H. J. Chittenden. I hope that, with the co-operation of all the members, Mr. Chittenden will have a successful term of office.

Mr. Jeffrey Walsh, Blackburn, has sent us samples of the three grades of canary seed of which he has received a shipment of 200 sacks direct from Spain. All three grades are beautifully clean, and the seed is sound and well ripened. Mr. Walsh will be pleased to send samples free to any reader on application, and they will all be found fine value at the prices advertised.

Mr. J. Pitchford, Stoke-on-Trent, has now ready his new illustrated catalogue of cages and bird-room requisites. It seems to comprise everything needful in the bird-room, and the prices are moderate throughout. Mr. Pitchford writes that since the commencement of the war he has kept prices as low as is consistent with sending out reliable goods, and business is very brisk in spite of present difficulties.

In the March number of "Bird Notes," the Journal of the Foreign Bird Club, Mr. E. Hopkinson begins an article on "The History of the Budgerigar" which should be of great interest to the many keepers of this favourite Parakeet. Other articles are "The 1915 Breeding Season in Boyers House Avianist," by W. Shore Bailey; "My Aviary and Gouldian Finches," by B. C. Thomasset; "The Nesting of Landrails in Captivity," by G. E. Rattigan; and "The Story of my Black-headed Gull," by F. Dawson-Smith.

A Lecture on Heredity.

On Monday next at 8, at the City and Suburban A.C.B. meeting, Church Institute, Paddington St., close to Baker St. Station, Mr. Norman, CAGE BIRDS' artist, judge and critic, is dealing with the important subject of heredity in birds. This is an opportunity of spending an instructive and pleasant evening, which should not be missed by those able to attend.

Yorkshire Joint Prize Distribution

The joint prize distribution of the Yorkshire Canary Club, National Green-marked Y.C.C., the Cinnamon-marked Y.C.C., Open Norwich Plainhead Club, and the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S. will take place on Saturday, March 25, at the Market Tavern, Bradford, commencing at 6.30. There will be a smoking concert during the evening, and a good attendance is desired, writes Mr. S. Midgley. Ladies are specially invited. The concert will continue until eleven o'clock, and it is hoped that the evening will be a record success.

OBITUARY.

ONE OF THE OLD BRIGADE.

The Passing of Mr. Young Ashworth.

The death of that good old-time fancier, Mr. Young Ashworth, will be heard of with regret by many of the older fanciers of Yorkshire and Lancashire. Young Ashworth was a true son of nature, an earnest student and lover of bird life, and he was as happy rambling the fields and studying nature in her wildest moods, as he was when sitting down in his birdroom and reckoning up the season's chances amongst his Lancashires, Yorkshires, Lizards, and Norwich. Twenty to thirty years ago our old friend was a power and source of strength to the Northern Fancy, and those of us privileged to enjoy his friendship will remember how keen was his interest in the many controversies of those days, the days when the Fancy, as we knew it now, was gradually coming into the light, and bursting the bonds of ignorance and darkness.

Never again shall we see his earnest, happy face, never again hear his keen and merciless dissection of unsound arguments, never again will it be our pleasure to hear him criticise the awards of our judges. Pleasure in criticism? Yes! Young's criticism was that of the man who did not criticise to destroy and pull down, but to build up and improve. He was a fancier true—a fancier first and a showman after.

He was taken ill last March and has suffered greatly from gangrene, which was so bad that some time since one foot had to be amputated. But all efforts to save his life were without avail, and his soul passed away on Thursday in last week, whilst his mortal remains were interred at Christ Church, Todmorden, on Saturday last, March 18. Thus is snapped another link with those good old days we love to recall, and our hearts go out in silent sympathy to the loved ones of our old friend Young Ashworth.

Cardiff C.B.S. Going Strong.

The balance sheet of the Cardiff C.B.S. for 1915 shows that after handing over for the benefit of prisoners of war in Germany the whole of the profits on the annual show, namely, £12 19s. 7d., there remains in hand a cash balance of £16 18s. 9d., and silver cups to the value of £38.

A Treat for Liverpool Fanciers.

We have received the syllabus of the Walton Everton C.B.S. for 1916. A specially interesting evening should be that of April 12, when the hon. sec., Mr. A. G. Hunt, of the Sterling Seed Co., will give a lecture on "Seeds of Commerce as used for Cage Birds, their sources of origin, and relative feeding values." Mr. Hunt has kindly promised to yet us have the manuscript of the lecture for publication, but those who can attend should certainly do so, as the lecture will be illustrated by some very instructive lantern slides. On Aug. 9 Mr. J. Thornton, of Liscard, will lecture on colour feeding, and bird-keepers should book this date also.

THE BIRDKEEPERS' ROLL OF HONOUR.

Mr. H. BELL (Hornsey.)

I am very sorry to state, writes Mr. W. Gilbert, hon. sec. London and Counties A.C.B., that our member, Mr. H. Bell, of Hornsey, has had the news that his son Lenzo has been killed on active service somewhere in France on March 2. I am sure all fanciers that knew him will join with us in our sympathy for Mr. H. Bell and family.

Sapper John Miller (Dundee).

I regret to inform you, writes Mr. A. Law, hon. sec. City of Dundee C.B.S., of the death of Sapper John Miller, R.E. Mr. Miller was a member of the City of Dundee C.B.S., and enlisted when war broke out. He had only been six weeks in France when his wife received the sad news that her husband had given his life for his country. We extend our deepest sympathy towards his wife and three young children.

Private George Arnott, Jun. (Sinclairtown, Fife).

That well-known fancier and judge, Mr. Geo. Arnott, Sinclairtown, Kincaldy, has just received the sad news that his youngest son, Private Geo. Arnott, 10th Gordon Highlanders, was killed in action on Feb. 11, writes Mr. J. H. Adam. Private Arnott was killed whilst on sentry duty, by the blowing up of a German mine, at a time when the British trenches were being very heavily bombed. Private Arnott was wounded in three places at the battle of Loos, Sept. 25 last, and went to the front again a few weeks ago. He was a well-known footballer, and more than one club in the "Kingdom" were anxious for his signature, but his views on professional football were very pronounced. Private Alexander Arnott, another son, is at present on his way to India with the Cameron Highlanders, and was wounded at Neuve Chapelle in April last year. Those that know Mr. Arnott will, I feel certain, extend to him their deepest sympathy in his present trying ordeal.

Millions of Migratory Birds Eaten.

According to T. Gilbert Pearson, secretary of the National Association of Audubon Societies, in America, "Millions of small birds in migration are destroyed yearly by the people of the Southern States and used as food. This destruction, now increasing, is having serious effect on the number of song birds in the north. Negroes are armed with guns, and many are proficient in other means of destruction. In the north, large numbers of labourers, emigrants from Europe, kill small birds for food. It is only recently that little birds were sold in large quantities in New York City, and they are still sold by thousands in the south. The scarcity of Robins, Bluebirds, and Bobolinks is becoming noticeable over wide areas."

The "Robin" mentioned in the above paragraph is the migratory Thrush, a bird about the size of our Song Thrush. It is a talented songster, and an effort was made a few years ago to establish it in England. An example, probably one of these liberated birds, was shown at the last Horticultural Hall Show as "an abnormally-feathered Blackbird." The "Bluebird" is the beautiful songster once freely imported into England and known to our aviculturists as "The Blue Robin," and the Bobolink is a bird about seven inches long and mainly black and white in plumage with a conspicuous yellow nape. It has a delightful song, but is very destructive among the growing rice crops of Carolina, where it is estimated that Bobolinks destroy at least one-tenth of the growing rice. It certainly seems strange that "millions of small birds are destroyed and used as food," while the export of a few to be kept as pet singing birds is prohibited by the law of the United States.

"IN AID OF THE NOVICE."

EXTRA PRIZE AWARDED.

THE prize of ten shillings offered for the best short article in aid of the novice has been awarded to Mr. R. Blincoe, 179, Drake Street, Rochdale, for his contribution published in our last week's issue. The all-round merit of the articles sent in has been of so high a standard that practically every one was worthy of a prize, and we have decided to award a second prize of five shillings.

The additional prize goes to Mr. J. W. Newsome, Sutton Green, near Guildford, for the article "Foreign Birds for the Novice," which is published in this week's issue. The winners may have either cash or books to value on application.

HOW ADVERTISING PAYS.

"Please thank those who replied to my advert. in CAGE BIRDS. I had more than 50 replies, and it is impossible to answer them all."—D. HANN (Fencehouses).

"Re my advert. of Cinnamons in CAGE BIRDS of February 26th, I replied to all who enclosed stamp. It is asking too much in these hard times to expect a reply if stamp is not enclosed."—J. TAYLOR (Haworth).

"I have had so many applications for my Norwich through my advert. in CAGE BIRDS that I cannot reply to all, but I have answered all those who sent stamp. I have disposed of my surplus birds, and could have sold many more. Kindly thank all who applied."—T. SMITHERS (Hadlow, Kent.).

"Through my advert. in CAGE BIRDS my Roller Hens, about two dozen, were all sold last week. I still keep having letters and cards that I cannot afford to answer, so if you will kindly inform the senders through CAGE BIRDS I shall be pleased."—R. ELLISTON (Gospel Oak).

"From one advertisement of Scotch Fancies in CAGE BIRDS I had over 40 applications, and could not reply to all."—J. LITTLE (Byker).

"My advert. in CAGE BIRDS was a huge success. I got sale for more birds than I advertised, and had to refuse orders, as I had no more to spare."—A. E. PRIEST (Shindliffe, Durham).

Foreign Birds for Novices.

By J. W. NEWSOME
(Sutton Green, near Guildford).

THE principal points which should decide the choice of a novice who contemplates making a collection of foreign birds are the ease with which they can be kept, their colouring, perhaps their chances of breeding, and occasionally their powers of song.

Before making his selection, however, he must decide on how he is going to house them, and here let me put in a plea for the aviary. No bird shows to the best advantage in a cage, and the beauties of foreign birds especially are greatly diminished unless they are in a state of comparative freedom, while, if breeding is to be attempted I am afraid there will be very little success with most of the species if they are confined to cages. Anyone who has a few yards of ground to spare or an empty room can construct an aviary at far less expense than he will incur in buying cages, and the pleasure of watching the graceful and often quaint movements of his charges is out of all proportion to the trouble incurred.

The Outdoor Aviary.

An outdoor aviary must have a shelter house, and if the would-be bird keeper has not one already standing in his garden which he can make wind and water-tight, he will have to erect one. The materials for this can be bought ready prepared for putting together very cheaply; as a glance at the advertisement columns of CAGE BIRDS will show, and very little skill is needed in erecting them.

If the owner has a wall facing south, this is an ideal place against which to place the house. The flight can now be constructed of half-inch wire netting and wooden uprights. Half of this should be roofed over, so that even in rough weather the inmates can be outside. A plan which I have found very useful, and which is most efficacious in keeping off draughts is to get bunches of gorse and furze, and thatch the side of the flight by passing the ends through the meshes of the wire from within outwards. This can be continued also to great advantage round the back of the flight against the wall. Besides keeping the birds warm and cosy it gives them something on which they can vent their destructive powers, and so give plants which may be in the aviary a better chance of not being pecked to pieces.

Necessary Incidentals.

The floor of the aviary is best covered with gravel, as this can be raked over every morning and a clean appearance ensured. For plants inside the most satisfactory are privets in pots. These can be changed at intervals if they get destroyed. The ingenious man can always construct a water bath and drinking fountain out of any old materials on which he can exercise his artistic talents, and the pleasure he and the birds will get from this is immense.

All that is now required to complete the aviary are food hoppers, which can be placed at the discretion of the owner. I have devoted a great deal of space to the description of an aviary, as this is a point to which the novice fails generally to give sufficient attention, with the result that foreign birds are classed as "hard to keep."

Having got a home for our birds, we must now consider how to feed them. Many foreign birds, like British, require soft and insectivorous food, seed, fruit, and all sorts of green food. A useful soft food which can be used for soft-bills, as well as for seed-eaters when rearing their young, is equal quantities of ants' eggs and dried flies mixed together, and the same quantity of powdered biscuit added. This can be kept almost indefinitely if stored in well-corked bottles, and is ready for use by moistening with water, preferably adding a little crumbled sponge cake.

The Rest of the Menu.

For seeds the beginner cannot do better than lay in a supply of canary, millet, oats, wheat, hemp, sunflower, and rice in the husk, and use them as described later. A variety of insects is not quite so easy to procure, but mealworms should always take a prominent place. These, with maggots, live ants' eggs, and cockroaches, when procurable, will provide a sufficiently varied diet. Fruit such as bananas, plums, apples, pears, etc., will be greatly appreciated, but must be quite ripe, and plenty of green food in season is a necessity. Lastly, but not least, a plentiful supply of cuttlefish must be kept up, and if possible a little heap of mortar rubbish which can be placed in a corner.

Those Millions of Canaries!

ARE YOU DOING YOUR BIT? WE MUST CAPTURE THE GERMAN CANARY TRADE!

Splendid Opportunity for Wounded Soldiers in Pleasant Spare Time Profitable Occupation.

Last week we published a letter from a man who had to return £20 in cash for Roller Canaries he was not able to supply. We drew attention to the hundreds of advertisements recently published in CAGE BIRDS asking frantically for Canaries of every description. We stated that a dealer had informed us that he was quite prepared to purchase and pay cash for one million Canaries if only he could get them! Where are all these birds going? Why are they wanted? Is the demand for them caused by the favourable circumstances in which many working men and women are now finding themselves for the first time in their lives? Is this extraordinary demand for our little yellow songsters caused by the temporary and fictitious prosperity of this country? Partly yes, and partly no. We have the very best reason for stating that two-thirds of these Canaries are being sent out of the country. They are going to every part of the civilised globe. Thousands of them have been despatched every week to America.

Not the least interesting of our discoveries is that prior to the war we used to despatch thousands of Canaries to Germany for subsequent re-exportation by the Germans to the U.S.A. Now the present opportunities for the Canary breeder are going to improve. While we are at war with Germany the opportunities of capturing her trade in every direction remain open to us. We must, therefore, be quick to grasp the moment, and capture business while we can.

Canary breeding is an industry; it can be made a gigantic business.

The public have little or no conception of the small fortunes that some men are making in connection with this trade. We have a certain German American installed in New York who is practically king of the Canary trade in the States, and who has a magnificent mansion and several motor cars secured out of the profits he has made in dealing in these jolly little feathered pets. At the present time this German American is able to obtain only comparatively few birds direct from the German sources he was going to before the war. He is compelled to pay fat cheques to English dealers for the Canaries he is obliged to buy from them. Let us have more of these cheques to convert into silver bullets wherewith to defeat the enemy. Let us build up the British Canary trade to such proportions that when the war is over we shall be masters of the situation so far as the demand for Canaries in every part of the British Dominions is concerned.

Canary breeding is one of the pleasantest of hobbies. In present conditions it is one of the most profitable.

And we desire to emphasise with all the vigour that is at our command the advisability of soldiers, who are incapacitated from work involving strenuous manual labour, taking up Canary breeding as a very serious enterprise. It will involve very little capital.

A World-Wide Opportunity.

There is an unlimited demand for Canaries from North and South America, from Australia, from New Zealand, from India, Africa, and from every spot over which the British flag flies triumphantly.

We were recently privileged to have a most interesting glimpse into the business affairs of one of the largest London dealers in Canaries. This firm in normal times exports out of the United Kingdom only 15,000 pairs during the season. During the last season these exports have grown to 150,000 pairs during the same period, and we were informed by the dealer that he could have sold 25 times this number in the past three months, if only he could have obtained the birds from British breeders. Here is astounding food for reflection.

What are you as a Canary breeder going to do about it? Are you going to try and rise to the occasion? Are you, in the interests of the old country, going to let all your friends know about the possibilities in Canary trading?

Are you going to hand over some of your birds to the wounded soldiers to give them a start in this most inexpensive and lucrative of pursuits?

Formerly we imported from Germany something like 100,000 pairs of German song Canaries every year. We know that one man alone turned over 25,000 pairs of German song Canaries per annum. These birds are not coming from Germany now, and a good job too, but are you trying to fill the gap? Our wounded soldiers can help to fill it—we are going to try and help them to do it, and we want your assistance in our project.

Our Scheme in Outline.

We stated last week that we proposed to open a subscription list with the object of establishing a fund for the purchase of Canaries for wounded soldiers. We have pleasure in stating that fund this week with a gift of £5, and the Leeds Roller Club has sent £1. Our correspondent Mr. E. L. Davitt writes us an admirable letter in response to our request of last week, and he suggests that we should divide our readers into groups.

We adopt this suggestion, with one addition, and accordingly divide helpers into the following groups:—

1. Those who will promise birds.
2. Those who will promise cages.
3. Those who will promise cash.
4. Those who will undertake to sell birds or cages to wounded soldiers at a very reduced price.

Now, readers of CAGE BIRDS, rally round the old flag!

Don't be content merely to read this article and lift your eyebrows. Put your hands in your pockets and your fingers to the pen, and send us along offers of help in one or other of these four ways—if you can do so, in all four ways.

We suggest to all societies that they should immediately open subscription lists in aid of the CAGE BIRDS' Wounded Soldiers' Fund, and solicit all their members for a subscription of not less than 6d. Mr. Davitt's suggestion that we should divide the fanciers who are willing to help into counties will probably materialise as soon as we have received enough offers of help to justify such a division. Now, is your name going to appear in our list of helpers for next week? HE GIVES TWICE WHO GIVES QUICKLY. Our address is CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London.

The Blackbird as a Pet Bird.

By JOHN FROSTICK
(Streatham Common).

A FRIEND of mine, a well known aviculturist, who owns a very extensive range of outdoor aviaries, wherein are kept hundreds of species of foreign birds, paid me a visit one day to inspect my collection of British and Foreign birds. He was very kind and generous in his remarks as to the excellence of the stock in general, until he came to a cage which contained the subject of this sketch. "What!" he said, "a common Blackbird! Fancy you taking the trouble to keep a bird like that, it would take a great deal of enthusiasm on my part to induce me to keep a common Blackbird," so I had to point out that mine was not a "common Blackbird," but a very excellent exhibition specimen, tame, a fine songster, and withal a beautiful bird.

Blackbirds rank amongst the commonest of our British species, they are met with everywhere; even in my London garden they visit me daily, and I am thankful for it, for they are one of the most useful as well as being one of the most handsome birds that fly. The beautiful glossy jet black plumage, set off with the bright crocus yellow bill and eye-cere, together with the exquisitely symmetrical shape make it quite as attractive as the most gaudily coloured denizen of the tropics.

Among the Best of British Songsters.

Then its song! The rich mellow flute-like notes which gladden our country walks are a positive delight. Next to the Nightingale and Song-Thrush, there is probably no other bird who emits such melody. It is true that he takes toll of our garden fruit, but he amply repays for this in the good he does in destroying innumerable insect pests.

Blackbirds, being of a wild disposition, must be taken from the nest and reared by hand if they are required to be docile cage birds; adult wild caught birds never become tame enough to be any use for show purposes. A show specimen should be as large as possible, size being an important point, but its plumage must be tight as wax, not loose and soft, which is often taken to denote size by some. Its colour must be a dense jet black, without any shade of brown, and must be glossy as silk, the beak should be clear of dark marks, and, together with the eye-cere, must be of a rich orange colour, not a pale lemon colour as in some.

The general shape must be symmetrical, the bird standing well and boldly on its legs (which should be dark horn in colour, not piebald) not too tame, but with every confidence. Being slow to mature, a Blackbird is at its best from three to eight years of age.

How to Keep a Blackbird.

Blackbirds are such strong, hardy birds, that they are not difficult to keep in health on almost any kind of food, even on such rubbish as "German paste," and I have known people to keep them on breadcrumbs and crushed hemp seed. Barley meal, oat meal, and Indian meal, mixed into a stiff paste with milk, has been recommended by some; others advise dog-biscuits crushed fine, and this is certainly a better food than the others, but although the bird will live and apparently do well on this simple diet, you will never bring out all its good points unless you feed it in a more generous manner. Mine have the best insectivorous food mixture it is possible to obtain, containing liberal quantities of ants' eggs, dried flies, silkworm pupae, dried ground beef, and biscuit meal, made crumbly moist with grated raw carrot, mixed fresh daily. After the moult colour feed should be used, to improve the natural colour of the beak and eye-cere, this takes about six weeks to accomplish. Ramsden's tasteless pepper is perfectly harmless and is the sort I use and recommend, but do not on any account colour feed while the bird is moulting or its plumage will come out a rusty black which will quite spoil its chance of winning. Don't forget that the bird will appreciate a few mealworms, just as much as your favourite Nightingale or other delicate "soft-bill," while a ripe pear or apple and berries of many kinds will be eaten with a relish.

The Stock Cage and the Show Cage.

My Blackbird cages measure 2ft. 2in. long, 16in. high, and 11in. wide. They are of the box shape, open only in front, with a bolting door at the right hand end on a level with the perches. The wire front is movable; the wires, placed 2in. apart, of stout gauge, with a sliding door in the centre to hang the bath. At each end hang outside glass covered boxes containing square or oblong china food and water vessels. The drawer bottom is made of zinc and kept covered with coarse-cut pitch-pine sawdust. Two oval perches about an inch wide placed on the middle bar complete a very satisfactory cage.

The bath plays an important part in the management of all cage birds, Blackbirds in particular; a good pattern is one made in zinc, half of the back and the top fitted with punched bar wire—size 7in. long, 5 1/2in. deep, and 7in. high. Larger sizes may be used, but the one quoted is ample. It should be hung on the cage for a quarter of an hour daily, and then taken off, the bird will soon understand that it has to take its bath when required or not at all for that day.

The show cage is not required to be so large as the living cage, it is also of more elegant design, my own are of the N.B.B. and M.C. pattern, bow-shaped front, 19in. long, 9in. wide, and 16in. high, the stout wires of the front being 1in. apart. Two perches, food and water vessels made of zinc, placed inside and fixed to doors on the bottom rail opening outwards. The colour of the inside is a matter of taste, but I consider, after many experiments that there is nothing equal to Aspinall's No. 2 sky-blue. The outside stained black and French polished.

The Blackbird which was so well illustrated in CAGE BIRDS, of March 4, is now no longer in my possession, having passed into the keeping of Mr. E. Stephens at a high figure, and I wish its new owner every success with his purchase.

This article has been written at the request of our worthy Editor, whom I feel in duty bound to obey in appreciation of the honour I have received, and if my remarks have been of any use or guidance to any novice or amateur bird lover to enable him to be as successful as I have been, I shall be delighted.

Correspondence.

Early Rollers.

SIR.—You may be interested to hear that I have a nest of young Rollers which were hatched on Feb. 29—Leap Year chicks. The hen was set on Feb. 15. One chick broke through on the 28th, and the other two hatched on the 29th. I was wondering if this was a record birthday for Canaries.

H. G. HILL.

Hen Bullfinches and Hybrid Breeding.

SIR.—I am much obliged to the writers of the letters in CAGE BIRDS in reply to my queries. I may add that I have obtained three fresh Bullfinch hens this winter, and intend to run them as follows: Cock Canary and hen Bullfinch, Siberian cock Goldfinch and hen Bullfinch, British cock Goldfinch and hen Bullfinch, and I will certainly let your readers know if I have any success. Do I understand Mrs. Christie to mean that when once the cock Canary has paired with the hen Bullfinch they should be kept together the remainder of the season? Would not the cock be worn out if this be done? The reason I wanted to get my Bullfinch hens in breeding condition early this year was that in former seasons it has been the end of July or August before my hens started nesting, and the cock Canaries went into moult before the hens had finished laying.

CANARY-BULLFINCH.

Oxalic Acid for Insect Pests.

SIR, I have been interested in the correspondence, in CAGE BIRDS, with regard to the use of oxalic acid for killing red mite. I agree with Mr. St. John that the use of this acid is, to say the least, very risky. Why not for preference, purchase a pint of petrol, transfer birds to another cage, take the one to be treated outside, and with a small brush paint the cage with petrol?

If this operation is repeated, and the petrol is brushed into all crevices, you may rest assured that there will not be a single red mite left alive. I have tried petrol on wasps and it is most deadly. The user must bear in mind that petrol is very highly inflammable and should not be used indoors, and after the cage has been done, it should be left in the open air for half an hour to allow the fumes to blow away.

I trust this process will be tried by your reader in preference to oxalic acid.

J. O. MOSSOR.

Swallow's 6,000 Miles Journey.

SIR.—I am sending you a cutting from the February 12 issue of our local paper, "The Eastern Province Herald," Port Elizabeth, Cape of Good Hope. The discovery mentioned will I think prove interesting to bird lovers at home, as I think the Swallow referred to must be one of the many birds marked in England and liberated. I shall esteem it a favour if you will make the necessary enquiries, and give the result through your valuable journal, CAGE BIRDS. I am writing Mr. Amm to the effect that I will let him know the result after your reply, which I have no doubt he will be pleased to get. The place mentioned is a farm near Grahamstown. I wish your much appreciated journal every success.

C. CHAMBERLAIN.

"Mr. S. George Amm, of Lindale, Salem, has made an interesting discovery. On Sunday morning he picked up a dead Swallow, and just above the foot was a piece of metal bent round the leg. Straightening the metal he could read on one side of it, "Inform Witherby, High Holborn, London," and on the other were the figures, "82,620." During the summer months thousands of Swallows make their homes in London, building their nests under the eaves of the houses. Though somewhat dirty birds they are always welcomed as the harbingers of summer. In the autumn they leave England, a vast proportion of them crossing France to Northern Africa. They can attain a speed of eighty miles per hour. It is quite possible a few may find their way South of the Equator, and even into the Cape Province, a journey of six thousand miles. Mr. Amm is endeavouring to get into communication with the individual who affixed the band to the Swallow's leg."

[We have sent the information to Messrs. Witherby, and shall doubtless hear from them on the subject.—EDITOR, CAGE BIRDS.]

Canary Breeding for Wounded Soldiers.

A Workable Scheme Suggested.

SIR.—I was very pleased to see by the article in CAGE BIRDS of March 18 that you purpose starting a subscription list in order to be able to start wounded soldiers in the Fancy to get for our country the trade in Canaries, and also to fill up the ranks of fanciers whose numbers have been sadly thinned through the war.

I quite believe that we can breed and export Canaries every bit as good or better than the Germans have done in the past, if only we can make a start, and, as you say, now the breeding season has almost started we could not wish for a better time?

I see you ask for suggestions from readers, so if you will permit me I should like to make the following. I should first of all start a list of fanciers who are willing to help, dividing them into three groups—(1) those who are willing to give birds, (2) cages and (3) cash. Then a list of wounded soldiers. I don't know if you intend to give help to every wounded soldier who applies, or only to those who cannot well afford to start themselves, but this could be settled later. If only for those who cannot spare the cash to start, I should suggest that the clergyman of their parish be asked to second their application for birds, etc.

Then why not divide the fanciers who are willing to help into counties so that the soldiers to be helped are afforded assistance by people of their own county as far as possible. If there should be an over demand in one county, then some other county could be drawn upon.

It seems rather a big undertaking, but I feel sure that such a good cause will meet with success if those fanciers that have not been called upon "to do their bit" will all join together and help those who have done so well and helped to make the Army what it is to-day.

I hope other fanciers will send their suggestions and opinions, and if any of mine are of any value in forwarding this movement, I shall feel well repaid for sending them. Wishing your splendid paper every success.

E. L. DAVITT.

The Leeds Roller Club Points the Way.

A Generous Donation and a Generous Promise.

SIR.—At a specially appointed meeting of the Leeds Roller Club summoned to discuss the article appearing in the March 18 issue of CAGE BIRDS re the breeding of Roller Canaries by wounded soldiers, it was unanimously agreed to help your scheme to the best of our ability. To give your scheme a start, the Leeds Club, through their Committee, are very pleased to subscribe £1 (note enclosed).

It was felt to be a great pity that something of this nature had not been thought of before, as by this time many fanciers have sold out their surplus stock for the season, but all members present pledged themselves to do their utmost at the end of the present breeding season (that is, with ordinary luck) towards making a collection of birds from different fanciers, and we think that by these means all the birds necessary for your scheme can be got together, and the money subscribed may be spent in cages and utensils. I myself should be pleased to be of any use to your scheme that would make the distribution easier for you, especially up here in the North.

We also give a hearty invitation to any soldier who is a fancier to attend our meetings, which are held the first Saturday in the month, at 7.30 p.m., at the Griffin Hotel, Boar Lane, Leeds, and we are prepared to make members of any wounded soldier fanciers for at least the next two years free of all cost. Any information in this respect I shall be pleased to give to any applicant.

H. BEST, Sec., Leeds Roller Canary Club,

Like Begets Like.

SIR.—I read with pleasure and interest Mr. A. Howieson's article in CAGE BIRDS of Mar. 18 upon his success as a fancier, in which he says that he, like many others, discovered the interest of Canary breeding by his first visit to a bird show with a friend, and helping him to get his exhibits safely home.

I am proud to say that to-day there are many following his footsteps, and that secretaries are always looking out for such coming fanciers. By his joining a local club he was able to make many friends, and discover all that he wished for. There are many readers who, I am afraid, do not belong to clubs, but if they only know of the interesting meetings and lectures given by experts I feel sure they would join.

Take for instance pair shows and young bird shows. For sixpence per cage you can be assured of getting good value for your money, if only in the expert opinion you get on your birds. There may be in your stock a half-dozen that you are unable to separate; send the lot if you can stand the entry, and I feel certain you will be rewarded. This is where the clubs are of the greatest importance to the novice, and at times to the champion.

Support the clubs by your visits to the lectures, demonstrations and shows, and join the club that is your handiest; you will never regret your action. The breeding season is now coming to hand, and we are all hoping to breed a champion. If we fail this year under the burdens we are facing, we still have the pleasure of looking forward to another year, and years to come, with our fascinating hobby.

I appeal to all members of societies to bring their friends to the shows, and I am certain that Canary breeding in England will be a successful industry. My best wishes to Mr. Howieson for a successful season.

A Recipe for Mahogany Stain Wanted.

SIR.—Some four or five years ago one of your readers gave a recipe in CAGE BIRDS for a mahogany stain and varnish combined which I tried and found very good.

I have unfortunately lost the recipe, and being in need of some more of the material, am writing to ask if the sender will kindly repeat it. If my memory serves me rightly the recipe was originally given in reply to a query for a mahogany stain for Lark cages. I tried it at the time, and now, after a few years' active service, it is still as good as ever. It dries quickly, sets hard as iron, and has a polish as though it was varnished, qualities very useful when one has not much time.

VARNISH.

The Song of the Canary.

SIR.—I was somewhat amused with Mr. Clark's letter, and at first thought my ideas regarding the Canary's song were knocked upon the head; but I soon perceived that he was "off the line," because the matter in question concerned birds bred and reared in captivity, to wit, the domestic Canary, and not birds in a state of natural liberty—that is to say wild birds.

Mr. Clark suggests that if my reply to the Rev. H. A. Soames' enquiry is a correct one then hen birds should be songsters too. Now whoever heard of hen birds in song? I will, however, go so far as to say that I once had a hen Goldfinch Mule which tried her best to sing, but compared with her brother in an adjoining cage the respectable attempts she made were only an apology for a song.

Mr. Clark is confident that with regard to birds singing and nesting are "due to instinct," a very hackneyed expression nowadays. When people say there can be no reason in animals, it seems unreasonable and narrow-minded. We do not know all the secrets of nature.

W. NAPPER.

SIR.—Like Mr. W. Napper, I am getting an old man, and I am less inclined to engage in discussions on birdy matters, and there are other reasons which I need not mention here. Can any reader inform me if the domestic Canary's song is similar, or somewhat similar, to that of the wild Canary. Perhaps Mr. Edward Williams and Mr. W. Napper will give us their views on how birds learnt or got their separate songs and call notes after they were created, and whether birds build their nests by imitation or instinctively.

My experience is somewhat similar to that of Mr. B. Clark. I kept a Twite which was hatched by a Canary, and reared and kept with Canaries, and its song was similar to that of the Twite in its wild state. This bird never heard the Twite's song. I kept other two Twites with Canaries which were hand-reared, but they did not learn the Canary's song, but they imitated the call notes of the Canary.

Young Cuckoos hatched and reared by Meadow Pipits do not imitate the call notes of the foster parents, and the note of the young Cuckoo is quite different from that of the adult Cuckoo. The note of the young Greenfinch is also quite different from that of the old one, and it is the same with the young Chaffinch, etc. Some years ago when at Paisley Bird Show I heard a Stirling imitating the notes of a Skylark, but the tone of the voice was quite different from that of the Skylark, and I am aware that a species often imitates the notes, more or less, of another species when reared in the same room.

JOHN CRAIG.

Some Notes from a Soldier Reader in India.

SIR.—I am writing to let you know that one of your old readers is still alive. The present state of affairs prevents me from indulging in my favourite hobby, my pets at present being limited to an Indian Ringneck Parakeet, without a tail. It is very tame, and follows me about the barrack room, though at times it takes a fancy to eating mosquito nets, and chewing photo frames, for which both the poor old bird and "yer umber" get severely censured.

We had a week's camp out last week, and I did a little observing, though the birds here in the plains are not numerous. We marched out in the direction of Baghat, to Bohla, on the banks of the Ganges canal, and I will try and give you a list of the birds I saw.

The first thing to take my eye on leaving Meerut City was a flock of about thirty Vultures, patiently waiting on the roadside for the carcass of a water buffalo that some natives were skinning, whilst the trees were full of Kite-hawks and another smaller kind of Vulture, of a black and white colour, with yellow beaks, also waiting for a little beef. Mynahs there were in plenty, and occasionally we came across small flocks of birds similar to Thrushes, but with slightly longer tails, which were rounded off instead of square. There were also some black birds, rather more slim than the Blackbird of "Blighty" (England), with long forked tails and black beaks.

At one of the halts I saw a pied bird about the size of a Thrush, it was chiefly white with black in its wings, and I should think by the shape of its bill and its way of flying, that it was a variety of Shrike. At this point also two Pied Wagtails made their appearance, and reminded one of home.

When we got to camp, some of the chaps went out with shot guns, and a fine Peacock was a victim to their sporting instincts. No wonder the natives hold it a sacred bird, for they look lovely in the sun, a Wild Duck, two partridges, a bird termed a Crow Pheasant, of lovely dark chestnut colour, several Pigeons, and Doves, and three Blue Jays were also among the bag. The Blue Jays are simply magnificent as they alight on the ground before one.

On the following day I saw brought in (dead I am sorry to say) a Peahen, some small blue Doves, and several Hornbills. I explored the bamboo grove and found several birds of a dark brown, nearly black, colour, with chestnut rumps; they were very shy, and had exactly the appearance of a Robin, as regards size, build, and the elevating of the tail.

On the canal I discovered a few water-fowl, that were evidently Teal, and on pushing through the pampas grass that rose to a height of fifteen feet, just at sunrise one morning, I disturbed dozens of small brown birds that had been roosting there; they are up and away like a flock of Linnets, in fact that is what they reminded me of, only they were not quite so large.

On marching from Bohla to Durdā, our next camp, a few more of the birds already mentioned fell to the guns, also a Plover. At the new camp we saw dozens of Parrots, and I had the pleasure of seeing a lovely Kingfisher dive. They are gorgeous birds, larger than the English ones, and brighter plumaged, they have blue caps, white cheeks, and a patch of white on a reddish chestnut breast, at least they appear to have, and the wings seem to be blue, with the back of a red chocolate. I may be a little out as to details, but it is as near as I could see. There is a smaller kind of Kingfisher in the small canals near the cantonment, but they appear to be black and white.

I have seen three kinds of Mynahs here, though when in the hills last summer I saw others that apparently do not visit the plains. Crows there are in thousands, and the Kite-hawks are so bold as to swoop down and snatch pieces of meat from one's hand.

Birds are often offered for sale by the natives, small Finches mostly, though sometimes Softbills are brought round. I saw two birds of a yellow colour, with brownish markings on the wings, which the native vendor declared were Canaries. My opinion is that they were Saffron-finches, though I have never seen any of the latter.

I have only just found out that a little ornithology passes away the time in this anything but delightful country, or I would have taken more notice of our feathered friends. We are all longing for active service, but we can't go till sent, so must make the best of it here.

Well, dear Mr. Editor, I wish you and the journals under your control a very prosperous New Year, and I say roll on the time when I can again peruse the columns of CAGE BIRDS in comfort.

Queries Answered

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must be written on separate sheets of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—Queries received during any week, up to the first post on Saturday morning, will be answered in the issue bearing date of Saturday in the following week.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Children's Fund (London).
- (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 151, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

DIRTY FEET, ETC. (Mrs. J. B. R.).—The symptoms you name are due to a congested state of the system, and often arise from some error in the diet. Liberal indulgence in any form of oats will frequently give rise to such symptoms. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape, and in addition give separately twice a week a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, black rape and linseed, and on two other days give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake sprinkled with maw seed. In the drinking water add ten drops of syrup of buckthorn every second day for a week, and after this give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a week or fortnight, as may seem necessary. Give a small spray of some green salad, such as watercress, daily, and offer the bath in the early part of each fine, mild day.

VARIED (L. W.).—(1) No, there is no difference whatever in the manner of feeding green Border Fancy Canaries during the breeding season and any other variety. The usual seed staple of canary, or a simple mixture of canary and summer rape, as the case may be, is continued all through the breeding season, the supply of egg food being given in addition when there are young to be fed. (2) Yes, you could take a nest of pure Canaries from a hen at the beginning of the season, and then use the same hen to breed a nest of Mules in the later part of the season. You would be well advised to get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d., post free, or House's "Manual," 1/2 post free, both from our Manager. The latter will give you details of the different breeds.

ABOUT OUTDOOR AVIARY (C. O.).—(1) Common mongrels, Border Fancy, Norwich, or Yorkshires, bred and reared under normal conditions of temperature, would suit your purpose best. (2) You give no definite measurements of the aviary, but I take it from the sketch that the whole structure is 6 ft. by 5 ft., including the covered portion. If this is so, and the birds are intended to fly at liberty in the whole space, then three cocks and seven hens would be sufficient to start the season with breeding. To more effectually frustrate mice nail strips of tin 6 ins. wide closely around legs of covered portion. (3) You could quite safely keep two Redpolls, either cocks or hens, in the aviary. They would do no harm. But do not put any confidence in that old boy about their keeping down red mites. I have known a Redpoll's cage infested with red mites. "Nuff sed."

WHAT WAS WRONG? (Birchwood Ben).—In all probability the bedrock of the trouble was that you mated the birds much too early. The end of March or beginning of April is quite early enough to start breeding, and it is nothing unusual for the first brood to be sacrificed to the owner's impatience when they are hatched several weeks before the natural breeding season commences, as was the case with yours. You might try removing the cock when the hen begins to sit with the next brood, and take him away out of sight of the hen, leaving her to hatch out and rear the young herself. Do not be too liberal with egg-food at the beginning. Give in moderate quantities only at one time, and give it fresh at least twice a day. Otherwise continue to follow the directions in the book you name, and, the season being more advanced, you may find things go all right next time.

FOOT TROUBLE (A Bird Lover).—You should have described the appearance of the toes more particularly, as to whether they were curled up underneath or standing out stiffly. On the whole, seeing that the bird is allowed its liberty in the room, I would advise you to catch it and bathe its feet for a few minutes in a warm solution of boracic acid and a small teaspoonful of the acid dissolved in a saucerful of warm water. When the feet are quite clean examine them closely to see if there is a stray hair or similar substance twisted round them and holding them together, and if not, if there are any signs of the feet having been burnt by the bird alighting on the stove. In the former case carefully remove the obstacle, and in either case, dry the feet carefully after bathing and anoint them sparingly with zinc ointment, but do not leave on any surplus grease to collect dirt or grit.

WHAT RESULTS? (Novice, J. H.).—(1) You omit the most important point—whether the even-marked buff cock is bred from a cinnamon strain you might expect to get ticked, uneven-marked, and probably a few stray even-marked and clear. Uneven-marked and ticked would preponderate. If the buff-marked cock is green bred the results would be more or less heavily ticked, uneven-marked and self greens. (2) Here again you omit to say whether clear yellow cock is green or cinnamon bred. If the former the mating you suggest would result in uneven-marked and more or less heavily ticked clear now and again, a few self greens and a few clear now and again. If the cock is cinnamon bred the result should be ticked and uneven-marked, with a fair proportion of clear, and a fair chance of an even-marked bird now and again.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

FEEDING BLUE TITS (Gouldian).—Blue Tits should be fed on a good brand of insecticide mixture made crumbly moist, as a staple diet. You can also supply them with a variety of other food, such as hemp seed, sunflower, maw, various kinds of nuts, fruits, and a piece of mutton suet stuck between the bars of the cage. Do not give these "bit-bits" all at once, but occasionally to vary the diet. Insects should also be offered, and a spray of any weed infested with green fly will be particularly appreciated.

FEEDING A BRAMBLEFINCH (C. F. T.).—You can treat your Bramblefinch in precisely the same way as recommended in the Nutshell for the Chaffinch, they appear to be so near akin that what suits one suits the other. (2) I have never heard of these birds breeding in captivity excepting in the production of Hybrids. I would advise you to try them in the aviary. Give abundance of wild food and all the insects you can secure for them. I would also advise a little soft food such as insecticide mixture, with a spoonful of hard boiled egg added.

TROUBLE WITH LINNETS (J. Cooper).—It appears to me that you have been treating your Linnets too generously without giving sufficient green food as a corrective. Give five drops of syrup of buckthorn in one tablespoonful of water to drink for about 4 hours, and repeat a couple of days later. Procure the Nutshell booklet No. 2 on the Linnet, and feed as advised in that, giving just now plenty of young dandelion leaves, gathered out in the open, and when the seed pods are ripe let them have two or three daily.

GREENFINCH FOR MULING (Cicely M. Landon).—The fact of the wings of your Greenfinch being clipped would not make any difference to him for Mule breeding.

TO STEADY AND FEED A LINNET (Lianet Mule).—The only way to steady a Linnet is by keeping it near you and handling the cage as often as possible, but the fact of his being a bit wild seldom makes any difference in a cock bird's breeding. (2) The following mixture of seeds would suit your bird—Canary 3 parts, teazle 2 parts, rape 2 parts, linseed one part, as a staple mixture. Then make up another of gold of pleasure, niger, thistle, maw, and dandelion, and give a small teaspoonful daily. Three days a week offer a little crushed hemp. Supply him pretty freely with dandelion leaves and other green food.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

AILING BUDGERIGAR (J. B.). Keep this bird in a separate cage till it is quite fit again. It would be better kept in a rather warm room, yet where the day and night temperature is fairly even. After catching it, before putting it in the cage, give two drops of tasteless castor oil, direct to the beak, either from the end of a quill or camel-hair brush. Get from your chemist the following mixture: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills and glycerine in equal parts, and for a week, in lieu of the drinking water, supply one teaspoonful of the mixture in two teaspoonfuls of water: as Budgerigars are small drinkers, this quantity will be ample for the daily supply: use a glass or china drinker. Afterwards give one teaspoonful of Dineford's magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intervening days lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food. Diet: a staple seed mixture of equal parts canary and white millet seeds, green-food, grit, and cuttle-bone. Supply a millet spray once or twice a week, and, if they will eat it, a piece of sweet apple is very wholesome for them. Report progress in two or three weeks.

WHAT BIRD? (Curious).—I regret that I am not yet able to definitely name your bird; the absence of the tail adds to my difficulty, but I am retaining your sketch for a short time in the hope of solving the difficulty. Your sketch, so far as it is complete, would exactly fit the Quaker Parakeet, except that the head, sides of face, throat and neck, are more mouse-grey than slaty, yet I fancy your bird must be this species, but I will have another search and put in another reply shortly. I will keep the sketch safely for the time being, and return to you in due course.

GOULDIAN FINCH NOT NESTING (Gouldian).—It would be better to separate the birds till the hen recovers condition. Every fourth day put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water, and on the intermediate days half that quantity of chemical food. The hen's trouble may be egg-binding, if so, and she has not succeeded in passing the egg, I fear this reply may be too late. Keep her in a warm room, one where the day and night temperature does not vary much, if possible. It will be plenty of time to put them together again when the middle of next month, by which time the hen should be quite fit again; at any rate, it is no good putting her up for breeding till she is. Keep a millet spray continually in her cage, changing it as soon as picked clean.

HOW LONG? (West Bank).—The period would vary; some take longer to settle than others. But a talking bird should commence to talk again just as soon as it got to know its new owners and showed no fear when they were in the vicinity of its cage or when attempting to its wants—a bird cannot be said to be settled till this stage has been reached. I should form the conclusion that a bird was not and had not been a talker if it did not talk once it had acquired confidence in and was fearless of those around it and who attended to its wants. Till a bird is quite settled, anything calculated to scare it should be avoided in the vicinity of its cage.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Tom Roby.—Yellowhammer succumbed to congestion of the lungs.

A Strickland.—Cirrhosis or hardening of the liver, a disease in which there is a formation of fibrous tissue developed in the liver causing destruction of the liver tissue and disorganisation. It results from the ingestion of irritant particles partaken of in the food at varying periods.

Miss F. Memory.—Roller died from congestive oedema of the lungs. The room was probably overheated, resulting in imperfect aeration of the blood. It would become oppressive, inhibit the heart's action with consequent stagnation in the lungs.

HOW CHAMPION CRESTS ARE BRED.

The Crested Canaries, which frequently command a price up to £25 each, are the result of the union of a Crest and a Crest-bred, the latter being itself the progeny of a Crested and Plainhead Canary. The lightly-marked Crested hen in our picture is the property of Mr. A. J. Watcham, Hackney, and won 1st and Special at the City and Suburban A.C.B. Show, and 2nd at Holborn Hall. The other bird is the beautiful Crest-bred cock which won 3rd at Sheffield and 1st at Holborn Hall, for Mr. B. Steel, of Sheffield.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit system should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned to the same means as were used in sending them.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

GENT'S AND BOYS' SUITS FREE!

Astounding Easter Offer for a few weeks only to "Cage Birds"
Readers! Send only a post card and save pounds.

Now readers, would you like a suit or pair of trousers absolutely free? Perhaps your boy also? A most astounding offer is being made by a well-known London firm! They have discovered a remarkable Holeproof Cloth. You can't tear it! Yet it looks just the same as £3 or £4 suitings. You can't wear it out, no matter how hard you wear it, for if during six months of solid hard grinding work every day of the week (not just Sundays), you wear the smallest hole, another garment will be given free! The firm will send a written guarantee in every parcel. Think, readers, just 15s. 3d. for a man's suit, and only 4s. 9d. for a pair of trousers, or boy's suit 5s. 11d., knickers 2s. 3d., guaranteed for six months' solid grinding wear, and replaced free of charge if hole appears.

The Cloth.

As previously stated, this really marvellous cloth is absolutely untearable—you cannot tear it, no matter how hard you try; but possibly the thought arises that being of such hard-wearing quality, it must resemble in some shape or form the ordinary old-fashioned cord. That is not so. Side by side with the very latest designs in tweeds, and the best of our fancy worsteds, readers without testing the cloth would be unable to say which was holeproof and which was ordinary tweed. It is absolutely identical in appearance, and for considerably less than a sovereign, it is possible to obtain the design and colouring which in ordinary tweeds could not be procured under £3 or £4. The designs are suitable for office and best wear and field or rough wear, so that readers, whether at work or at leisure, need have no hesitation in wearing garments made from this remarkable cloth. The cloth could not be torn by a barbed wire fence, it is quite impossible to tear it, and the manufacturers predict that just as soon as the public learn of its remarkable wearing qualities, ordinary tweeds and serges will become a thing of the past. For your boys it is the very cloth.

Prices Extraordinary.

The prices of garments in this holeproof cloth are truly remarkable—of course, they are cut very low, more or less, to induce the public to test the cloth. It is possible to procure a really well-cut, smartly-finished suit consisting of jacket, vest, and trousers for the absurd sum of 15s. 3d., whilst a pair of trousers guaranteed for six months' solid hard wear could be obtained for merely 4s. 9d., or gent's riding, cycling, or walking breeches for 6s. 3d. Boys' Suits from 5/11, knickers 2/3.

Method in Making.

Readers naturally ask the question, can these goods be well made for the money? Here again is the result of the employment of modern methods and machinery, the outcome of years of experimentation, which have rendered it possible to supply a suit of clothes for 15s. 3d., which our grandfathers could not possibly have obtained at anything like treble the price. As an instance of the labour-saving devices, it must be mentioned that every sewing machine used in the making of these garments is driven by electric power; no work except the actual guidance of the garments through the machine falls on the worker, with the result that double and treble the quantity of garments can be turned out with absolute assurance that every garment is really well made. This is one instance of how the method carried from the beginning to the end of the business has resulted in a better and cheaper article for the public.

The Result.

Readers would do well to investigate this offer at once, before the rush, and the result to themselves will be a considerable saving of money in their tailoring bills, besides being able to wear garments made from a cloth which looks really smart, and yet will wear even better than the ordinary common cords.

Generous Free Samples for Readers.

To induce readers to give this remarkable cloth a trial, the manufacturers offer to send (if readers will send merely a 1d. postcard asking for free samples) a generous supply of cloth cuttings, fashions, and a most remarkable measurement chart, which will enable readers to measure themselves as well as any tailor could measure them. This will be sent absolutely free of charge by return of post. Readers must not delay a day, but should study the advertisement beneath, and send a postcard for the free samples of cloth cuttings. Remember, send now, while prices remain low.

Birds should now be coming into condition for pairing.

But do not mate them up until they are quite ready.

Mind that the perches in the breeding cage fit tightly.

Give a little egg-food and some freshly-cut dandelion. These will help to bring your birds along.

NOT SINGING. SOFT MOULT.

Wanted, a trial. We are confident our medicines will give you satisfaction. Special offer to all bird fanciers. If you have any birds that you are relying upon for the coming breeding season that have gone off song, or have gone into the soft moult, we guarantee you a perfect cure. We have the grandest medicine ever introduced for bringing birds into breeding condition. Ditchfield's Tonic Drops are a guaranteed cure for loss of voice, soft moult, slow moult, going light, feather plucking, and inflammation of the bowels.

DITCHFIELD'S FAMOUS REVIVO is absolutely unequalled for giving new life and vigour to the birds, and for producing that smart light appearance of the plumage so much desired by all fanciers.

These two Medicines given on alternate days will bring any bird into breeding condition.

DITCHFIELD'S SPECIAL LUNG TONIC, the grandest medicine ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. Can be given with absolute confidence to the most weak or delicate birds. All medicines can be given in the drinking water, and the birds take them freely with marvellous results.

SPECIAL NOTICE: We ask all fanciers who have got any birds that are not quite in the best of condition to give our Medicines a trial at once, as it is often too late when the breeding season is upon us.

All the above remedies are sold in 1/2 and 2/2 bottles; two 1/2 bottles for 1/11, three for 2/8, four for 3/6; two 2/2 bottles for 3/9, three for 5/6, four for 6/9. P.S.—Owing to the scarcity of glass bottles we are unable to get the 5d. size to sell retail, but would like customers to know that the 1/2 bottles are treble size the 5d. bottles. All orders are sent away POST FREE per return from:—

FRANK DITCHFIELD, BIRD SPECIALIST, OLDHAM.

NOTICE TO READERS OF "CAGE BIRDS":

Do not send money in advance to any dealer on the Continent. My own experience has been: Firstly, in sending to France, money was detained there 14 days with no sending of stock; to Holland, after depositing money with the Railway Company and being promised 500 hens weekly, no birds could be obtained. This venture cost forty shillings in expenses —absolutely wasted.

POST CARD

HERR VON FRITZ CARLSURE,
GERMAN EDITOR.

CAGE BIRDS. ROLLERS,
154 FLEET STREET.
LONDON. E.C.

Some cowardly skunk has sent me the above anonymous postcard from Liverpool. I have a shrewd suspicion I know who it is. This man knows that I have repeatedly disclaimed German origin, and that the Home Office and also the War Office, for which I am working, long ago satisfied themselves that I was British to the core. Let him come out in the open and repeat the charge, and I promise him an immediate prosecution, which will teach him not to vent his spleen against me under the cloak of a false and shoddy patriotism.

FREDERICK CARL,
154, Fleet Street, London.

Dates of 1916 Bird Shows.

Further shows for which dates have been fixed are: Newtownards C.B.S., Dec. 1, 2; Glasgow Derby O.A., Sep. 30; Wallsend Mid-Tyne C.B.A., Nov. 4; Bolton Roller C.S., Jan. 5, 6. Secretaries should make a note of these and other dates as they are published, so that clashing may be avoided as far as possible.

The Black Redstart in Herts.

In "British Birds" for Dec. Mr. C. Oldham reports seeing a Black Redstart at Tring in Nov., 1915. Mr. Bickerton, in his Annual Report to the Herts. Natural History Society, says that the species has only twice previously been noted in the county, once by Mr. A. Sainsbury in 1893, and once by himself in 1904. The three records are separated, curiously, by periods of eleven years.

OBITUARY.

I very much regret to announce, writes Mr. W. L. Smith, hon. sec. S. Shields C.B.S., the sad loss of our member, Tom Winter, who has sustained through the death of his wife. She was of great assistance to him during the many years he has been showing. The Society was well represented to pay their last respects to the wife of one of our oldest exhibitors, to whom we tender our deepest sympathy. I am also sorry to say he is confined to bed at present, but we all wish him a speedy recovery.

MR. H. S. NAYLOR (Bradford).

I regret having to record the death of an old and highly respected Bradford Canary fancier, in the person of H. S. Naylor, writes Mr. F. Ludbrook. "Harry," as he was always called, had not enjoyed the best of health of late, but there was no indication that his end was so near, for on the very day that he died he had attended to his birds as usual. He was interred at Undercliffe Cemetery on March 24. The City of Bradford O.S., of which he had long been a member, was represented by Mr. James Clark. All fanciers, especially those in and around Bradford, will, I am sure, extend their sympathy to his family in their great loss.

Mr. W. Helliwell, sec., City of Bradford O.S., of which Mr. Naylor was one of the oldest members, also sends a sympathetic reference to the deceased.

New Sec. of Darlington C.B.S.

Mr. W. Hearfield, 45, Albion Street, Darlington, writes that he is now sec. for the Darlington and Dist. C.B.S., vice Mr. Stollard, resigned.

A Double Song Thrush Nest.

In the Letchworth Museum there are to be seen two nests of the Song Thrush built together. Only a partition separates the two nests. It would be interesting to know if the nests were used jointly, and if any young birds were reared therein.

Yorkshiremen's Kindly Thought.

On the occasion of the distribution of prizes of the Yorkshire Union of Cage Bird Societies, the National Green-marked Y.C.C., the Cinnamon-marked Y.C.C., the Yorkshire C.C., and the Open Norwich Plainhead Club, during a musical evening at the Market Tavern, Bradford, as reported in this issue, the nice little sum of £1 13s. was subscribed among those present in aid of the National Egg Collection for Wounded Soldiers, and has been received at the offices of the organisation, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

MONEY IN ADVERTISING.

"Will you kindly thank all those who replied to my advertisement of Budgerigars in last week's CAGE BIRDS. I sold all birds for cash on the Saturday, and have replied to all sending stamp. I can honestly say I might have sold hundreds if I had had them, through one advt. in your valuable paper."—H. HOOD (East Harling).

"The birds advertised in CAGE BIRDS were sold next day, which speaks well for your paper." J. B. KERR (New Barnet).

"Kindly thank readers of CAGE BIRDS who replied to advertisement of my Mule. I sold the bird on Saturday, and it has been impossible for me to answer all letters."—F. OWEN, (Cannock).

"I feel sure you will be pleased to know I have had a good demand for Birds in response to recent adverts. in CAGE BIRDS. I am sending you later on another advt. for next issue. I wish your valuable paper increased success."—H. SMITH (Wimbledon).

"Once more CAGE BIRDS gets there. I have often read of lightning transactions going on, but I never thought my Concertina would be sold within a few hours of the paper being issued on March 11. Please inform the many enquirers that it is sold, as they are too many for me to answer."—WM. TUCKER (Machen).

"Kindly thank all those who wrote me re Yellow Hens; too many letters to answer all." F. WICKHAM (Chatham).

"I have disposed of my Canaries which I advertised in your valuable Paper CAGE BIRDS. The replies were too numerous to answer."—H. R. AYLES (Leyton).

"I should like to thank those who replied to my advert. in CAGE BIRDS of Cockatiel and Norwich hens. I could have sold the birds over and over again, and had to return Postal Orders. I had more than 40 applications, and replied to all who enclosed stamps. This speaks well for CAGE BIRDS and its circulation."—H. SMITH, (Highbridge).

Foreign Birds for Novices.

By J. W. NEWSOME

EVERYTHING is now ready for the most important thing of all, the birds, but before placing these in their home, let me issue a word of warning. Budgerigars must be kept separately, or with other Parakeets, and not allowed with Finches, Waxbills, etc., or disaster will follow. The following will live together very happily, and in many cases there will be every likelihood of their breeding and rearing young successfully. In a properly constructed aviary they can be kept out of doors all the year round.

Hardy, Cheap, and Charming.

Two of the hardiest and cheapest Finches are the Zebra Finch and Ribbon Finch, or Cutthroat. These will be found to breed freely, and, although not gaudy in colour, their plumage is very pleasing. A pair of each of these will make a very desirable start in stocking our beginner's aviary. Their diet is very simple, being composed of canary and millet seed, with plenty of green food.

Another cheap and charming bird is the Common, or Red Avadavat. In this case the plumage is bright, red predominating in the male. The courting dance of the male is particularly fascinating, and is one of the things that repay one for the trouble of erecting an outdoor aviary. Others which can be successfully kept by a beginner are the St. Helena, Orange-cheeked, and Zebra Waxbills. In addition to the seed diet stated above they should be given a little soft food and an occasional insect.

A beautiful bird which should be in every aviary is the Java Sparrow. Its colouring, though subdued, is very pleasing, perhaps the most striking feature of its plumage being the bloom on it. In some aviaries these breed well, especially if the parents are aviary bred. Rice should be added to the diet of these birds in addition to the canary seed, and millet, and, of course, green food should always be given. A desirable addition would be a pair of Diamond Doves. These will nearly always breed freely, are very hardy, and have a very beautiful plumage. Their diet can consist of a mixture of canary, millet, rice in the husk, wheat, and hemp. These should always be included in a collection of foreign birds.

A Sweet-Voiced Foreigner.

The novice, I am sure, would now like a bird with a song, and the Silverbills, either African or Indian, are sure to please him. Their song, although not loud, is very sweet, and a few of these are a great acquisition to an aviary, especially if provided with a bush on which to perch. They require a varied diet of canary, millet, soft food, and a few mealworms. The Pekin Robin is the songster par excellence for the aviary. Apart from its great beauty, it is of a very tame disposition, and is a valuable addition. It seems to thrive best on soft food and fruit, with a few insects and a little seed.

As the aviary is now getting full, to complete the list we might add one or two mannikins, the easiest to keep for the beginner being the Bronze-Wing Mannikin. Their quick darts from branch to branch and pretty colouring make them general favourites. They thrive on canary, millet, soft food and mealworms.

I have purposely left out Budgerigars and Cockatiels. These are so much better in a small aviary by themselves, with perhaps a pair of Rosella Parakeets added, that, although Cockatiels will be found quite suitable for a mixed aviary, and can quite safely be placed with smaller species, yet this trio thrive and breed so well together that the beginner ought to strive to give them a small enclosure to themselves. For hardiness, beauty, and profit a small collection of these birds is hard to beat, and they will keep robust and healthy on a diet of canary, millet, oats, fruit occasionally, only do not forget to put the cuttlefish and mortar in this aviary also. The beginner need have no hesitation in trying the above birds in an outdoor aviary. They have all been successfully kept, and have proved a source of great pleasure, and often profit, to numerous aviculturists.

At the last meeting of the Wallasey and Dis. C.B.S. it was resolved that members on His Majesty's service be exempt from contributions, writes Mr. Wm. Mallinson, Sec.

All communications in future for the Porth and Rhondda Valleys C.B.S., writes Mr. A. H. C. Legg, should be sent to the hon. sec., Mr. John Challenger, 37, High Street, Cymmer, Porth, Glam.

Mr. Jas. Ramsay, Partick, writes that the result of Mrs. Fardon's voluntary offering draw is Nos. 2199, 4513, 311, 1290, 4839, 7923, 4372, 1964, 8254, 4665, 7390, 7275, 8461, 805, 1354, 267, 6113, 7874, 9308, 4152, and thanks all friends for their assistance.

A sample of "Gizagrit" has been received from the manufacturers, Fforestfach, Swansea. It seems to be mainly composed of crushed shells, and should be valuable as an addition to the ordinary sand used on cage-bottoms or supplied separately in a small tin.

The syllabus of the Halifax O.S. is to hand from the sec., Mr. J. J. Dunn, 67, Hattley Street, Battinson Road, Halifax. It contains the rules of the society, the names and addresses of members, programme for the year, and classification at the members' shows. Copies may be had on application to Mr. Dunn.

Capturing the German Canary Trade.

Our Proposals Awaken Widespread Interest.

Daily Press Sympathetic. Offers of Help coming in Freely.
Some Instructive Letters.

A CHANCE FOR A BRAINY ORGANIZER.

LETTERS to hand this week express the delight with which our scheme for helping our wounded soldiers has been hailed. Sympathetic articles have been published in the daily Press, and everything points to a successful issue.

Offers of help are being received by every post, and with them come letters from soldier bird-keepers asking for assistance in making a fresh start in their hobby.

These are from men who in peace times were filling up their spare time by keeping Canaries and other birds, and who, when war came, and they answered the call of their country, dispersed their stock and "did their bit." They would be doing it now, but they have been unlucky, many of them so unlucky that they will never again be fit for strenuous work.

How Everyone Can Help.

It is now our turn to do our bit. We are sure that our readers will not fail us, but we want their help or their promises quickly.

This is going to be a big undertaking, and in its doing all can play their part. We shall want birds, cages, appliances, cash, and help, and we cannot have too much of any of these.

Bird keepers in our Colonies all over the world want English Canaries. There is no question of the demand. But what about the supply? We must fill it somehow, and no better way offers itself than to put it into the power of our own heroes to take into their hands the production of feathered pets for their overseas compatriots.

The admirable article by Mr. C. W. Goodyear which we publish covers the ground so completely that we are content this week to leave it to speak for itself. By the help of our readers we shall be able to give effect to its recommendations, and that help we are sure will be forthcoming.

The subject is therein dealt with in such a masterly manner that we have printed the article word for word as sent, for we are sure that nothing we could add to it would improve it, and we could delete nothing without injury to its sound common sense.

A letter which certainly demands attention is that by Mr. L. E. Howard. This gentleman writes in somewhat of a pessimistic strain, and if it were the idea to breed Rollers at three shillings and sixpence a pair his letter would be entirely justified. We don't think the British working man, wounded soldier or not, would devote his energies to such a proposition.

Canaries Worth £1 a Pair.

There are other kinds of Canaries than common "Hartz Mountain Rollers." In our columns dealers are publicly offering up to £1 a pair for Norwich and Yorkshire Canaries, and there is all the difference in the world between rearing birds to sell at this price, and more, and the proceeding of the German peasants in the past.

Further, it is not suggested that our wounded soldiers should look to a possible 40s. a week out of their birds. They will, of course, have a pension, and, excepting in very bad cases, would also, it is to be presumed, have some kind of paid occupation.

The breeding of Canaries is a profitable proposition. The amount of the profit depends upon the quality of the stock and the enthusiasm of the owner, and the attention necessary is so slight as not to interfere with any other occupation.

Shops from Canaries.

Mr. Howard asks how we propose wounded soldiers should live for the first year or two while they are gaining experience.

They will have to live somehow, whether they keep Canaries or not. The difference is that they will live better with Canaries than without them.

In time, after they have gained experience and increased their stock, that which they commenced as a profitable spare time recreation will have become such a remunerative occupation that they will bless the day when it was introduced to their notice.

We know a man who a few years ago got a living in a provincial town by selling his wares from a barrow in the street. He kept Canaries as a spare time amusement, and found his hobby sufficiently remunerative to pay for itself and a bit over. Soon he took a small business with money earned by his Canaries, and he now runs twelve shops in his town.

Let us give our wounded soldiers a start. Men who have fought as these men have fought are not likely to be beaten by any difficulty they may encounter in Canary breeding.

CAGE BIRDS is nothing if not practical. To bring this matter to a head we require the services of a skilful, energetic, and experienced organiser, or someone with brains and go in him without the experience. We will pay a reasonable salary and expenses. What applications are there for this job in the country's interest?

A Fine Start for the Fund.

ALREADY the success of our scheme is assured, for the cash in hand or promised amounts to £9 4s., as under, while offers of birds or appliances are already coming in. The cash list is appended, and the other offers of help are specified in the letters we have the pleasure of publishing.

THE DIFFICULTIES, AND A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

A Unique Opportunity for British Fanciers.

By C. W. GOODYEAR.

THE articles appearing under the above heading are most interesting, and the proprietors of CAGE BIRDS are to be congratulated for taking the initiative in the matter.

I have been obtaining information on the subject, and think it would be of interest to readers to acquaint them with the result of the investigations.

One of our best-known breeders, to whose views one is compelled to listen with respect, has been of considerable assistance in the matter, and to him a great deal of the information herein is due. I frankly make this acknowledgment, because I do not wish to be credited with that knowledge of the trade which can only be gained by practical experience, and also that your readers may possibly attach a little more importance to the remarks than they may otherwise have done. The gentleman referred to does not wish his name to be mentioned at present, but it is not committing any breach of confidence in saying that he is one of our most successful bird men.

What Has to be Done.

In talking of capturing the German Canary trade, it is as well for everybody to understand that we are up against a very stiff proposition. The Teuton, with his usual business acumen, has made what to the majority of British Canary fanciers is merely a pleasurable hobby into a vast money-making undertaking. At the same time, thousands of Germans must have derived considerable entertainment out of breeding and training their birds, and have thus combined business and pleasure to their own profit.

Their success is due to organisation and co-operation on a grand scale, and we must imitate their methods if we are to succeed.

We need not copy their ideas, but we shall have to sacrifice a great deal of time, and expend a fair amount of money (which will repay itself with interest) in initiating and putting on a working basis some similar scheme.

The idea is not hopeless by any means, but the difficulties are enormous, and it is as well to realise at the outset what we are up against; for it is then we begin to understand what steps we are to take, not only to keep the invader out of our own country, but to extend our markets abroad.

Although the Board of Trade cannot supply exact figures, the competition from the Continent before the war was extraordinarily keen, we know, and growing year by year.

In this matter, as pointed out in CAGE BIRDS, our disabled soldiers would be able to deal the Germans a further blow by energetically and enthusiastically giving their whole-hearted support to the scheme.

The great fact to be borne in mind is this: The general public require a good, cheap singing Canary; he must "whistle," and be easily kept in condition. The people who buy a "singing" Canary, beyond seeing the bird fed and watered daily, do not trouble with it further, and are satisfied so long as the bird sings with fair regularity.

To oust the Continental birds, we must produce birds equal to them and at the same price. Although a very obvious fact, it is likely to be overlooked that to compete in business one must be as good, all round, as one's rival.

The next problem then is to supply a hardy, first-class songster at a reasonable figure.

The Problem of Song.

If we are to persist with the Roller, well and good. If not, we must take one of our own varieties and pay attention to its song. As regards the Roller, we all know the Continental breeders have standardised this breed, but it is a moot point whether ordinary English breeders (experts not included) could under altered conditions, bring it to the requisite stage of perfection. There are obstacles; diet, training, and conditioning need the expert touch.

I do not profess to know which of our English Canaries is most suitable for song training. The Border Fancy commands a ready sale for the purpose, and its claims should not be overlooked.

Then we must not forget the stylish Yorkshire, or the sprightly Norwich, both delightful pets, and hardy songsters, but can they be trained for singing to compete with the Roller? It would be interesting to know whether any of your readers have experimented in this direction, and what results they have succeeded in getting.

Our "fanciers" have regarded song as a minor consideration in their birds. The result is marked improvements in size, shape, and colour (in this the Germans are out of the running), but we have worked on the wrong lines from a purely money-making point of view. If we had paid more attention to the vocal efforts of our birds, there would be few Rollers in this country, and we should be holding our own abroad.

A Labour of Love.

The soldiers who participate in the scheme should really care for the hobby, and take an interest—apart from a financial one—in producing birds to a standard type and song. There should be co-operation between breeders, dealers, and the fancy press.

It would be useless to present a soldier—a novice—with a pair of Canaries, tell him to start breeding with them, and then leave him to his own devices. The result would be doubtful. We will suppose he meets with a fair measure of success, and brings one or two birds to a stage when they could be placed on the market. It would be idle to suppose that they could compete with the imported Roller. The birds would have to be selected by an expert. If inferior stuff is sold either at home or abroad, it would quickly discourage the sale of British Canaries, and our last state would be worse than the first.

It is very necessary that a sufficient number of breeders interest themselves in the movement, it would be fatal to have an insufficient supply after creating the demand. To ensure this will take considerable time. Delay is dangerous. The scheme must go forward at once.

There have been several suggestions made, and by adopting the best of them, we can evolve a working scheme, something on the lines of the following:

1. Fix the type of Canary.
2. Appoint secretaries in each town or district which supplies sufficient volunteers willing to do their best in the interest of the scheme.
3. The secretaries (this is a business undertaking) would receive a bonus on the value of the birds sold. This would encourage them to push the scheme.
4. At certain periods of the year the secretaries would send the large dealers lists of birds their members had for disposal, and at the same time advertise their surplus stock.
5. When the different districts were organised, shows, singing competitions, etc., could be held, and at various dates the services of experts engaged, to give addresses to members on the management and preparation of the birds.

The proprietors of CAGE BIRDS having consented to open a fund, a start could be made almost immediately. The scheme would make a bid for the support of the whole Canary industry. It would benefit cage makers, seed dealers, appliance manufacturers, bird dealers, etc., and should have their unrestrained approval.

As progress is made we could possibly have an enlarged export number of CAGE BIRDS to circulate in the Colonies and the United States, with whom the Continental exporters do the bulk of their business, but the home market is an extensive one, and would absorb a good percentage of the birds.

Not a "Crow," But Cautious.

SIR,—I have read with interest your article entitled "Those Millions of Canaries," and would crave your indulgence and space in your valuable paper to make a few remarks. I do not want to be the proverbial crow, who does nothing but croak, but treating it as a business proposition, all sides of the question must be carefully studied.

Let us first consider how the large quantity of Canaries are produced in Germany. In the Hartz Mountains and Black Forest district, and even in some of the smaller towns, the peasants and the workpeople in factories, and other occupations, breed Canaries as a side line, just as the peasants spend their evenings making wooden toys. Then in the autumn, an agent travels round, almost, I might say, from door to door, buying up all the surplus stock. These are sent to the coast, and thence shipped to England, after classification. I myself have bought German Rollers, cocks for 4s. each, and hens for 1s. 6d. per pair (i.e., 9d. each) in the little wicker cages in which they come over. This is retail.

When we consider that they must have passed through at least four middlemen's hands, what can the breeder have been paid? Let us say, for the sake of argument, 3s. 6d. per pair, which I consider if anything, over-estimated. I think the average British workman would want to earn at least 40s. per week. To produce this at 3s. 6d. per pair, he would have to breed 1,200 birds each season. This is allowing nothing whatever for maintenance of stock and young, which at present food prices would be very heavy. Let us say, he should breed 1,500 birds per season, to cover everything. To do this he would want at least 200 hens, and this means each hen rearing 7.5 young ones, which would be a very high average.

Then we must consider the room that 200 hens would need. As I myself have never kept more than 20 hens, I am afraid I cannot form anything but a rough idea of the room required, but I do not for a moment think a cottage would accommodate anything like this number. Of this I am sure, that overcrowding is fatal.

A Few "Caws."

Another thing to consider. Canary breeding is, I might say, a science, and a man cannot walk straight into Canary breeding with no previous experience with any hope of financial success. Otherwise there would be no need of the services of your experts to men who have been breeding Canaries for several years.

How do you propose that these wounded soldiers should live for the first year or two, whilst they are gathering experience, and multiplying their breeding stock?

I do not wish to throw cold water on your scheme, but I know from seventeen years' constant experience that the pitfalls in the art of Canary breeding are many and various, and breeding cannot possibly be undertaken by a novice with any probability of a fair livelihood.

I am a business man, and I understand you want this subject treated as a strictly business proposition, not as a philanthropic institution, and I therefore say, as a remunerative side line—excellent, but as a man's sole support, worse than useless.

We must be very careful how we treat this subject, or we shall find that we are doing the wounded soldiers a lot more harm than good.

Thanking you for the space I hope you will accord me,

L. E. HOWARD.

Some of the Generous Promises Already Received.

SIR,—In help of your excellent scheme for wounded soldiers you may put me down for six cages, and I shall be pleased to supply further cages at a reduced rate. Our wounded soldiers will all have "done their bit," but they will be ready to do a bit more when it means capturing their enemy's trade as well as making a little profit for themselves.

To Help Wounded Soldiers.

SIR,—I shall have much pleasure in promising a pair of Norwich Canaries and to offer my surplus after the breeding season at a low price, as I think the cause is worthy of all the support we can give it. We must fight tooth and nail to oust the "Dirty Dogs." As you remark, there is a fine trade to be done in Canaries. It is a paying hobby, and as a business can be made a success with determination. Now, fanciers, don't forget our gallant men who have given their all; roll up in your thousands with offers of help.

Cash Now: Birds Later.

SIR,—I am very pleased to see in your issue of this week the splendid start you have made towards the Wounded Soldiers' Fund for Canary breeding. Also I am delighted to see that you have adopted some of my suggestions of the previous week, and I sincerely trust that they will be a help in making this venture into a great success. I am enclosing a small donation towards the subscription list, and hope to help with some birds later on. Now, sir, if I can be of any use in any little way, I shall be delighted to do so on hearing from you.

Shaftesbury. E. L. DAVITT.

The President of the London and P.O.S. will help in many ways.

SIR,—I am agreeable to contribute £1 in cash or equivalent value in birds and cages towards your scheme for wounded soldiers taking up the breeding of cage birds.

Also, if you find one or two inexperienced men in this district, W. Hampstead, or between here and the City, I would endeavour to coach them. On the other hand, if you find a responsible experienced man in the same district I am agreeable to lend him a pair of birds or a cock and two hens (which I do not want to part with), and a double breeder and fittings, for him to do a season's breeding, and I will make any fair arrangement with him as regards his remuneration for doing so.

I hope you will be able to localise your scheme to some extent, as it would probably be more interesting for all parties.

C. CRABE.

A Pair of Norwich Offered.

SIR,—I have read with great interest your appeal for providing disabled soldiers with Canaries, etc., to encourage the breeding and export trade and capture the business hitherto carried on by Germany.

I am quite convinced the opportunity is now at hand to reap a good harvest for all who are in a position to extend the breeding of Canaries, for both the common variety as well as the show birds are difficult to get in any number to-day. The price has also gone up considerably, and by the end of this year birds will be at a premium.

Your appeal in this week's issue of CAGE BIRDS has aroused my sympathy, and although I am sorry to say I am unable to promise a pair of Norwich birds from my stock, I am pleased to enclose herewith a 10s. note for you to purchase a pair of birds for some unfortunate hero who wishes to start in the birdy world.

Money from Waste Seed.

SIR,—In my humble judgment I consider the scheme you have so ably advocated excellent in more than one way, and if I possessed much of this world's goods I would certainly give freely and liberally to such a good cause. Nevertheless, I beg to offer a suggestion, which I think would quickly turn in at least £100. The thought struck me when reading the "Don'ts" on the hoardings, "Don't waste bird seeds."

I had a peck or so of seed sweepings left in stock, which I was about to throw away, and in looking into the bag, I was loath to cast the stuff into the dust bin, so I at once carefully sifted it, first with a fine sieve to free it from the chaff and rubbish, then a half sieve to free it from sand and dust; the residue I pitched into a bath under a running tap, and while the water was troubled allowed the overflow to carry away all the useless floating seeds and husks. After about ten minutes' work the result was about two quarts of clean, heavy seed, which I spread thinly on a towel to dry. I have valued this at half the cost price, viz., sixpence, which I have much pleasure in enclosing herewith.

I keep very few birds now, but there are thousands of breeders and fanciers with very large collections of birds, such as I had many years ago, when I used to buy canary seed by the sack. The waste from such rooms and aviaries would be great, and if valued as above would prove a substantial help to your proposed fund.

W. NAPPER.

SIR,—I am enclosing my cheque for five shillings as a donation to your scheme. The undertaking has my warm sympathy, and I wish it every success.

COLIN BROWN, Hon. Sec.,
Richmond (Surrey) C.B.S.

SIR,—Seeing your appeal in CAGE BIRDS for Canaries for wounded soldiers, I will give a good pair of Border Fancy Canaries to any wounded soldier you like to name at the end of this breeding season.

A Cage-Maker's Offer.

SIR,—I am willing to supply double or single breeders at half price, also stock cages, show cages, wire fronts, seed hoppers, in fact, anything in the wood and wire line, all half price, and all made on the premises. I sincerely hope I shall be able to give a little help to capture the Canary trade.

Harrogate Soldiers, Note This.

SIR,—Your scheme is "right," and if you should get an application from a Harrogate soldier I should be pleased to set him up entirely with birds, cages, and everything necessary, and shall consider it a pleasure. Should you not get an application from here, then you can put me down for Nos. I. and II.

W. H. HAMLYN.

P.S.—I had a wonderful result from my small advt. in CAGE BIRDS. I sold £12 10s. worth, and could have sold many more.

For Soldiers in Spalding.

SIR,—Herewith I enclose P.O., etc., value 2s. 6d. as donation to your fund for starting wounded soldiers in the breeding of Canaries. I think it a very worthy scheme, and hope it may succeed and brighten what might otherwise be a very dull existence for some of our brave men.

Should there be any in Spalding, I would be pleased to give them any help I could in the way of information on feeding, etc. Wishing your scheme every success,

Spalding. ARTHUR J. AUTON.

An Offer from Swindon.

We have also, from a Swindon reader who does not wish his name to be published, an offer of four or five breeding cages for any wounded soldiers in his district. The reader making this kind offer says also that he will be pleased to give personal advice and help to any novice soldier in his neighbourhood.

Correspondence.

Early Rollers. Earlier Borders.

SIR,—In answer to Mr. H. G. Hill's inquiry about early birds, I write to say that I had a nest of four Border Fancies hatched on Feb. 17, and all doing well.

T. D. FORSTH.

SIR,—I have a pair of British Rollers, the hen of which was set with four eggs on March 12, and all of them hatched out on March 26. They are doing well so far, and this beats my record last year of April 12, as stated in CAGE BIRDS at that time.

E. TIFFEN.

SIR,—Referring to Mr. H. G. Hill's remarks on the above subject, I may say that I have beaten him by one day. The hen was set on Feb. 14, on five eggs, all of which were hatched by the 28th. I was greatly surprised at my good fortune, being a novice at Canary breeding, and as this was my first attempt.

N. RICHMOND.

Starlings with Young in January.

SIR,—I enclose a cutting from the "Cumnock Chronicle." You will see by it a pair of Starlings have brought out a nest of young in the month of January, and I thought it might interest your readers. Can anyone say if this is a record?

"A remarkable instance of early breeding on the part of a pair of Starlings has just been brought to our notice. The birds referred to have taken up their abode in a corner of the workshop connected with Mr. Robert Bowman's garage, and there, about the end of January, they hatched a healthy brood of youngsters, who do not seem to be any the worse of the rather severe weather we have been experiencing lately. For a resident, the Starling as a rule is rather a late breeder, but it is a bird of most irregular and erratic habits. As the preparation of the nest takes some time, the birds must have commenced their home-building efforts about the New Year. Perhaps their calculations as to the seasons were upset by the unrecorded warmth of the month of January."

To Extract Thistle Seed.

SIR,—Can any of your readers state a rapid way of extracting seed from thistle heads, or is there a machine on the market suitable for same?

SCOTCH THISTLE.

Oxalic Acid for Insect Pests.

SIR,—I quite appreciate Mr. St. John's cautious remarks in last week's CAGE BIRDS, also those of a brother fancier I met yesterday. He says he has used the oxalic acid, but only at half the strength, namely, two ounces in the whiskey bottle.

It is always best to be careful, but I find that when mixed with lime the poisonous matter is nullified, and yet it retains its cleansing properties, and has no ill effect on the birds. It is a perfect cleanser of mites, etc. I have used paraffin, and set it on fire, and then have found living red mites. I have also used a paraffin blow lamp, and still the same, but with the acid I get absolutely clean cages.

T. C. CLAYTON.

Resignation of the Hon. Sec. of the National British Bird and M.C.

SIR,—I have been reluctantly compelled to resign the secretaryship of the National British Bird and Mule Club, and Mr. E. Stephens, "Torrington," Devonshire Road, Palmers Green, N., has taken over the office.

I take this opportunity of thanking all members, both town and provincial, who have helped me in so many ways to lighten my work during my term of office, and I feel sure they will extend their help to my successor.

I also thank you, sir, for the privilege and kindness you have extended to me in the use of the columns of your esteemed journal, CAGE BIRDS.

Ringed Birds Recovered.

SIR,—In reply to your letter of the 24th inst. I have already received a letter from Mr. Amm reporting the recovery of the Swallow in Cape Province. This bird was ringed as a nestling on July 3, 1915, at Lytham, Lancashire. I am publishing a special note about it in the next issue of "British Birds."

With regard to the ringed Robin, I do not think the number you quote is correct, as ring 633 was not placed upon a Robin. Could you possibly obtain the ring for me?

H. F. WITHERBY.

(Perhaps Mr. Barnes, who gave us the particulars as to the ring No. 633, will kindly forward us the ring for identification.)

SIR,—The earlier history of the bird marked "Aberdeen University, 571," has not yet been received by us from the marker, but will be sent to you when it is available.

The Song of the Canary.

SIR,—I notice Mr. Napper's comment on my letter re "The Song of the Canary" in this week's CAGE BIRDS, but he does not apparently follow me with exactitude, and I fail to see how he judges me off the line. I maintain that birds brought up from their early infancy in captivity by birds of different species cannot be claimed to be in a state of natural liberty, especially in the case of wild birds' eggs being incubated under a Canary and brought up by same. This I have done on a great many occasions, and yet the song has always proved to be that of the kind the bird belonged to.

During the past thirty years I have kept almost every variety of British bird and Canaries, and can, therefore, claim to speak with some experience. I have never attempted to exhibit birds, but my father, at the time I started, was a very well known exhibitor of the London fancy, and on one occasion took 1st, 2nd, and 3rd at the Palace, besides having all his other birds highly commended, so that I naturally got some tips worth laying on various bird matters.

I quite agree with Mr. Napper that it would be very narrow-minded to presume that animals have no reasoning, and such a presumption could only be the outcome of no experience in the matter. However, I still maintain that the singing of birds is instinctive, or if that is too common an expression, I will suggest it is naturally inherent. I had a mind in my previous letter to mention the case of the Cuckoo, but observe Mr. John Craig has referred to this matter in this week's issue.

Does the Male Bird Transmit Stamina?

SIR,—I notice in your CAGE BIRDS of the 18th a letter from Mr. Banks touching on the above subject, in which he mentions his pleasure at seeing that Mr. R. L. Crisp is still interested in Canary breeding. I am glad to be able to state that he still is, as always, a very ardent supporter of the London Cage Bird Association, and is ever happy to open a discussion on matters appertaining to birds, and Canaries in particular.

One such discourse was initiated at our last meeting, the subject taken being "The Mating of Birds," and will be continued by Mr. Crisp at our next meeting, April 11, at 2, York Street, Piccadilly, at 8 p.m. Fanciers are cordially invited. At the conclusion of Mr. Crisp's remarks the matter will be open for free debate.

"Stamina" was one of the things mentioned, and should bring out some valuable information. Personally, I cannot agree with Mr. Tabet's assertion that the male bird has nothing to do with "stamina" in the young. I have a great aversion to using any but vigorous male birds, and this opinion is formed from actual experience. I have found it to be bad policy, for though he may successfully fertilise a clutch of eggs, the resulting progeny will very probably prove difficult to rear, and the poor hen reaps the benefit of the trouble. I would far rather endeavour to bring a hen into breeding condition than I would a weakly cock.

ARTHUR J. WATCHAM.

Greetings from U.S.A.

SIR,—I have had CAGE BIRDS sent to me by a friend at Bishop Auckland, Co. Durham. Reading it again brought back sweet remembrance of my bird-room and its pleasures of over two years ago. As I then lived in Bishop Auckland, and belonged to the bird society there, it gave me great pleasure to find an account of their second annual show. I remember the meeting which was held five years ago to consider the forming of the society, because I was one of that meeting. It was held in the home of the present sec., Mr. W. Crowther. He gave me the "fever" of the "Fancy," and many a happy hour he and I spent together among our pets. I hope the members will never forget (probably many do not know of it) the help rendered in many simple ways by Mrs. Crowther. She was indeed, and is still, a true fancier. On rainy and snowy winter nights I and other fanciers would go to the house, and we were always welcomed in a spirit akin to that which took us there. I trust the members will stick together, each doing his "little bit" to make the society grow not only in number, but in true spirit.

It was with deep sorrow and sympathy I read of the unfortunate lot which has fallen to Mr. Brownson, one of the members. "England expects that every man this day will do his duty." Mr. Brownson heard the call, felt his duty to King and country, and carried it out. I hope the members will do whatever they can, if only a little, to help him in his misfortune. Personally, I hope that he may soon recover, and yet find in life the happiness he felt before war called him and left on him its terrible marks.

Wisconsin, U.S.A. WM. MOORE.

In Praise of the Goldfinch Canary.

SIR,—I think the Goldfinch-Canary mule is the best singing bird. There are two reasons why I think so. The first is that we get more variety of song from the Goldfinch mule, owing, I should say, from the cross between the two different birds, and especially so when taught under both the male Goldfinch and the male Canary.

The second reason is that the Goldfinch mule is much harder, more handsome, and also more attractive than any other variety, partaking as a general rule after the father Goldfinch, which in my opinion is the foremost of our Finches, and is able to stand the different temperatures and draughts to which some birds are exposed.

The box cage is the most suitable one, with a loose front, which is very handy for cleaning purposes. It should not be less than 16 in. long, 16 in. high, and 8 in. from back to front, thus giving ample room for exercise which goes a long way to keep the bird in good health. The cage should be hung on the wall in a nice bright position, free from draughts, and below the level of the gas.

I find this diet suits my mules. For a staple diet I give good sound plain canary seed, giving in addition two or three times a week a tea-spoonful of good fish mixture, adding a little more hemp to it. I also give a piece of cuttle bone between the wires of the cage, as it helps the bird to digest its food. Give a little green food, such as water-cress, dandelion, or seedy chickweed, two or three times a week, plenty of sharp grit, and last, but not least, a bath on nice warm days.

LEEDS C.B.S.

Annual pair show, March 4. Judges, Mr. E. Norton (Canaries) and Mr. T. Dobson (Mules and Hybrids). Nor Pairs: 1, he, Wilson; 2, 3, c, Chambers and Smith; 4, vhc, Livingstone. Bord.: 1, 2, 3, Stephenson. Mules or Hybrids: 1, 2, vhc, Haigh; 3, 4, he, c, Hunt. Yorks. Nov.: 1, 2, 3, Sanderson; 4, Kendrew. Nor.: 1, Kendrew. Syllabus for 1916 was settled, and the specials promised bid fair to make a record. A lot of specials for British to be competed for by those who have not won a first in open competition with British birds should do something towards bringing the British to the front in Leeds. These specials, which have been got together by the well-known British bird exhibitor, Mr. C. Hunt, include a gold medal value 20s. given by Mr. R. Haigh; silver medals by Mr. J. Owen and Mr. Longley; stone of seed by Mr. Crane; and four show cages by Mr. Hunt. British bird fanciers in the district would do well to write for particulars of competition.—J. Chambers, Hon. GLASGOW AND W. COUNTIES.

Meeting and pairs show, Good Templars' Hall, Ingram Street, March 4. Mr. Dinwoodie presided over a fair attendance. Decided to call a special meeting, April 1, to revise rules; subs. and other competent business. Members to be notified by P.C. from Sec. Mr. Jas. Millen was appointed an auditor in lieu of Mr. J. Livingstone, now with His Majesty's Forces in France. Classes for show, April 1: Goldf., Linnet, H.M.; Siskin, Linnet, F.M. Messrs. A. Cochrane and J. H. Adam judged the show and gave entire satisfaction.

Goldf. Muling Pairs: 1, 2, Pettigrew; 3, 4, Cassells; 5, McGowan; 6, Hamilton. Linnet: 1, Hamilton; 2, 4, Pettigrew; 3, Bannerman. Club Reports.

LEITH O.S.

Meeting, Liberal Club Hall, Mar. 11. Mr. J. Allan, president, in the chair. Decided to postpone classifications and election of judges till later on. Same hall as last year to be booked for November show. Sec. was instructed to ascertain from members before 1st May how many hens they had to book. Members and others unable to attend meetings are invited to communicate with Sec.—J. A. Muir, Sec.

BARROW C.B.A.

Meeting, Mar. 22. G. Large presiding, and a fair turn-out of members. Decided to close nest feather nominations by next meeting, Ap. 5, so members please attend if you wish to compete for medals and cups. Let us have a record N.F. show, and give Mr. House and Mr. Wilson a busy day's work. There is some very important business.—D. McFarlane, Hon. Sec.

PEN-Y-GRIG C.B.S.

General meeting, Butchers' Arms Hotel, March 2. Chair, Ellis Hughes. Mr. Watkins elected member. Our annual show Feb. 26, proved very satisfactory, considering this was our first adventure; 69 entries. Specials were numerous, the principal winners being: Ellis Hughes, most points; Evans and Parry, Bord.; Ellis Hughes, Yorks.; Holmes and Edwards, best mtd. pair; Evans and Parry, best mtd. Bord.; T. Watkins, best Brit.

General meeting Butchers' Arms Hotel, Mar. 16. Chair, Ellis Hughes. Mr. Simms elected member. Decided that P.F. show should take place first Sat. in July. Classification was drawn out for young bird show. Decided that 6 birds must be nominated to compete for silver cup, and a challenge bowl for most points gained. A hearty invitation to local fanciers who care to join.—T. L. Evans, Sec.

ACCRINGTON.

Annual supper, Crown Hotel, Accrington, March 9, with a very good attendance; chairman, Mr. Sturtard. Sec's report was received with applause, their being a balance on credit side. President, Mr. J. Smith, replied, and gave some recollections of the days when he was a fancier. Cups for season were presented, the championship being won by Mr. Crawshaw and the amateur by Mr. Dean. Votes of thanks were recorded to retiring officers, who had worked hard to bring the society to its present state of efficiency, and members were asked to attend monthly meetings more regularly to ensure the work being carried on successfully. After business songs were excellently rendered by Messrs. Mitchell, Care, Noble, Parkinson, and others, not forgetting the good old song, "Who'll Serve the King," which was rendered by our President with the fortissimo of his younger days. A most enjoyable evening concluded with mutual wishes for another encouraging season.—A. Noble, Secretary.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Annual general meeting, Maskell's Hotel, Mar. 16. Mr. Whitton presided at the opening of the meeting which was well attended. Messrs. Escott and James, of Porth, attended. Election of officers: Chairman, Mr. E. J. Banks; Vice, Mr. P. Brail; Treas. and assist. sec., Mr. A. Ball; sec., Mr. E. Thomas; committee, Rev. C. B. Jolliffe, Messrs. E. James, D. Raymond, H. C. Smith, S. F. Whetton, E. J. Davies, S. Wiseman, J. Pearce, A. Shellan, F. Howard, W. J. Phelps, D. J. Lewis. Votes of thanks were passed to officials who so ably carried through their duties in the past year. Mr. Whitton and Mr. E. J. Davis thanked the members for the kind words spoken, and promised to help the society again this year. Mr. E. J. Davis had to give up office through his son joining the Army, and he found it impossible to give the time necessary to carry out the duties of treasurer. Resolved to hold monthly meetings in future in the fishing rooms at the Carlton Hotel. Mr. F. Slocombe wrote resigning through losing all his birds. Private Jim Dugmore wrote that he had arrived safely in France; we now have four members abroad. A collection at the meeting realised 11s. for cigarettes to be sent to our members at the front. The auditors, Messrs. Smith and Ball, gave a report of the year's working, which showed that after giving all profit on the open show, £12 19s. 7d., to the prisoners of war in Germany, we have a balance to the good of £16 18s. 9d., being a gain of £4 11s. 1d. on the year's working. We have also silver cups worth £38. New members enrolled: Messrs. Petscher and Skerratt. The series of table shows are a great success. Result of Goldf. class: 1, 2, spl. best bird, Escott and James; 3, Peterson; 4, Ball; vhc, Peterson; he, Brail; c, Davies. Linnets: 1, Davies; 2, Brail. Resolved to have a class for Bullfinches, also a Mule or Hybrid class, Mr. D. J. Lewis to judge; also a judging competition. Members please attend the next meeting, as at the Carlton Hotel we have secured a room that is well lighted and ventilated, a great improvement on our old meeting rooms. Subs. are due for 1916.—E. Thomas, Sec.

LANCS. AND LIZARD F.A.

Annual general meeting, Volunteer Inn, Oldham, Mar. 5, a good number attending. Balance sheet was passed, leaving a surplus in hand of £2 to be divided in specials for winners of club competition. Lancashire Champion: G. Fitton, 100 points; T. H. Collinge, 73; Stansfield and Ridgard, 61. Lizard champs.: F. Hamer, 102 points; W. P. Barnes, 92; J. Rukin, 82; J. Hampshire, 59; Stansfield and Ridgard, 41; W. Hardy, 35; A. Horden, 18. Lizard novice: Mrs. Burgess, Bristol, 53 points; S. Howard, Greenfield, 51; J. Teasdale, Waterford, 24; C. P. Bosworth, Kettering, 18; T. Millington, Longsight, 16; W. Moorby, Broadbottom, 9. Officers appointed: President, Mr. Alf Bradley; vice-pres., Messrs. J. Hampshire; W. P. Barnes; C. P. Bosworth; W. Moorby; B. Clegg; W. Hardy; W. Ridgard; G. Fitton; and N. Stansfield; treas., Mr. J. Swallow; hon. sec., J. Rukin, 44, Hall Carr Road, Rawtenstall; auditors, Messrs. J. Hamer and T. Millington; Committee, all remaining paid-up members. Decided we have no tea or social this year, and that specials be paid in cash. Meetings in future will be held at the Volunteer Inn, George Street, Oldham, first Sat. or Sunday of each month. Sec. to advise members by post card. Mr. John Ogden, Shaw, was elected a member, and the Society should be the stronger by the addition of the one time champion Lizard exhibitor. Mr. Barker Clegg opened a discussion as to the best means to establish the Lancashire in a better position, and awaken the breeders of same from the apathy which they seem to have fallen into. The way the classes are being filled was, in Mr. Clegg's opinion the surest way to kill all interest in the breed. He suggested that a meeting be called of Lancashire Canary breeders, to try and get breeders as members of the L. and L.F.A. He promised to give a lecture on the Lancashire if a room could be procured somewhere in the Rochdale district. Next meeting Volunteer Inn, Oldham, Apr. 1, at 6.30. We are anxious to enrol new members. Subs. 6s., no entrance fee. Enquiries to John Rukin, hon. sec., 44, Hall Carr Road, Rawtenstall, Lancs.

YORKS. PRIZE DISTRIBUTION.

On Mar. 25 the joint prize distribution of the Y.C.C., National Green Marked Y.C.C., Cinnamon Marked Y.C.C., Open Norwich Plainhead Club, and the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S. took place at the Market Tavern, Bradford, Mr. J. Butler, the retiring President of the Yorkshire Union in the chair, and despite the inclement state of the weather a good number assembled. Among those from a distance were Dr. Craig (Sheffield), Mr. A. Hirst (Accrington), Mr. H. W. Battye (Huddersfield), Mr. W. A. Wilson (Leeds), also several from Halifax, Keighley, Dewsbury, Huddersfield and District.

The chairman drew attention to the fine display of specials on view even in war time, and had to apologise for the absence of the Yorkshire Union novice medals and several others, the jewellers having so many of their number serving with the colours or on manitons.

The first lot of prizes were the Open Norwich Plainhead Club's, and Mr. W. A. Wilson (Leeds), the President, made the presentation. Mr. H. H. Towers gave out the Yorkshire C.C. specials, and mentioned that this was the first time an outsider had been able to win a trophy, which meant exhibiting all through the Yorkshire Union shows. However, whether Dr. Craig kept his birds rolled up in cotton wool or not, he came out first for Ogden's Trophy. Dr. Craig had a hearty reception, and his humorous remarks delighted the company. Mr. L. Dykes was the winner outright of Ramsden's Cup.

Then came the Cinnamon Marks, and Mr. C. Morrison, the president, had again to call on Dr. Craig, and congratulate him on his success. Mr. W. A. Cowgill, in his broad Yorkshire style, handed over the trophies and specials of the National Green Marked Club, and remarked that Mr. L. Dykes had won the trophy three years in succession, and it now became his own property. The other two trophies were also won outright by Mr. C. Morrison and Mr. H. H. Towers. It was announced that Dr. Craig had promised another trophy, and Mr. L. Dykes one of the others.

Then the Y.U. turn came, but unfortunately the medals were not to hand. A full list of the winners has already appeared in CAGE BIRDS.

During the evening a collection was made for the National Egg Fund for Wounded Soldiers, and this realised £1 13s.

Between and after the presentations songs were contributed by Miss Clegg, Messrs. S. Wilcock, Bennett, and G. Snead, and these added not a little to the success of the evening. Mr. E. Clegg, of Dewsbury, officiated at the piano in the absence of the regular pianist, and filled the gap splendidly. After a vote of thanks to the chairman and the artists, a very successful evening was brought to a close, all too soon, by singing the National Anthem.

Queries Answered

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

NO RESULT (Novice, Coventry).—Certainly it is worth while trying the ben ag in. Her present behaviour is most probably the result of being mated weeks before the season was in any way favourable. Separate her for a fortnight, and every second day give in addition to the usual dietary half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with about half the same quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure and sesame mixed in it. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of hemp, riger, white millet, teazle and linseed. Give both hen and cock two leaves of dandelion daily and try them again about the second week in April.

PREPARING CAGES (F. James).—As a permanent preventive of red mites the suggestion to paint the wood with creosote before putting on the final dressing is absolutely useless. Its immediate effect is more than counterbalanced by the disgusting odour which would pervade the room in which several cages so treated were kept. See that the joints, etc., of the cages are made as closely as possible, then well paint cages all over with turpentine, or paraffin, and when that is dried finish as you desire with whitewash, distemper, stain, etc., and for the rest depend only upon cleanliness and constant vigilance to keep red mites permanently at bay. Sanitary distemper would be preferable to whitewash for the insides.

NOW MOULTING (M. A.).—Glad to hear that the bird has so far responded satisfactorily to the treatment for not moulting. The cough will probably pass off as the bird recovers from the moult. But to make matters more sure give four drops each of oxymel of squille, ipecacuanha wine and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for a week or fortnight as may seem necessary.

MOVING BIRDS (Bird Lover).—(1) When the weather gets mild and settled, say, about three weeks hence, will be the proper time to remove the birds to the other room. To do so earlier would probably throw them into moult. (2) A cock bred last year, if in good health, should now be in full song. (3) To correct the diarrhoea see that the cage floor and perches are kept as clean as possible for the time being. Stop any particularly relaxing items of food for a time, and for one day only add to the water ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence. After this give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of opium and dilute sulphuric acid two days in every three until the droppings are normal.

IS IT POSSIBLE? (Experiment).—No, I do not think it possible to feed Canaries on small insectivorous birds' food solely, so that they could be utilised for rearing the young of such birds as Nightingales. It could be tried only in the spirit, pure and simple, of your pseudonym, and I don't advise it at that.

NOT MUCH IMPROVEMENT (Falkirk Balm).—You should have repeated the full particulars of the case, and also the treatment recommended. If there is even a little improvement it is better than none. Try bathing the place once daily with a solution of Wych Hazel—a small teaspoonful of the extract in saucerful of warm water. Apply by holding a small swab of cotton wool saturated with the fluid on the place, and frequently squeezing it out and recharging it afresh with the fluid for a few minutes, and thus avoid wetting the plumage more than is necessary. Dry as well as you can by absorbing the moisture with the swab and squeezing it dry again. If this is not more effectual, please write again, and repeat full particulars, and also state what was the former treatment.

EMPTY EGGS (Hot Box).—In the first place you mated the bird much too early, notwithstanding the casual laying. The eggs probably dried up naturally, which is often due to some defect in the structure of the shells. Then the restlessness on the nest is very suggestive of the worrying attacks of red mites. Burn all the nesting material that may be left about the cage, remove the birds to temporary cages, separately, and thoroughly overhaul the breeding cages and all its appurtenances, as you will find directed in this column several times lately for the eradication of mites. When the cage is quite dry and ready to make a start in perfectly clean condition, return the birds, say, about the first week in April, when you may find a very different result. There is no reason why the bird should not be worth trying again.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

AVIARY BREEDING (A Starter).—I you have not yet built your aviary I would advise you to get our publication, "Aviaries, Bird Rooms and Cages," post free, cloth 2s. 3d., paper 1s. 8d. It gives you full particulars upon the construction of aviaries and fitting up. You had better keep your pair of Canaries in the double-breeder, and purchase three or four hens to turn into the aviary with the British Finches. Do not put them all in, only one Linnet, one Goldfinch, and one Greenfinch. With these you should breed a fair number of Canary Mules, which should be saleable birds next winter. In stocking the aviary have an excess of hens if you like, but not cock birds on any account, or you will most likely not succeed.

WILD CAUGHT HYBRID (Crombach).—It is the general opinion of naturalists that Hybrids between two species of birds do not occur in a wild state, and although Hybrids have from time to time been caught it is supposed that they have escaped from captivity. This is what I expect your bird to have done, and what makes me think so is that the Goldfinch and Greenfinch are not birds to associate with each other when at liberty. Usually these wild caught Hybrids are hens that have been liberated, but by your description I should think your bird is of the male sex, and was probably given its liberty on account of its wildness, or it may have escaped.

VALUE OF MULE (W. House).—It is impossible to tell you the value of your Redpoll-Canary Mule. As a rule they are only worth a few shillings, but if yours is extra large and of good colour, and well marked, so that he would be a show bird, he would be more valuable. (2) These Mules can be bred without much difficulty in an ordinary breeding cage. (3) The Mule is much larger than the ordinary Redpoll, and therefore Mules bred from it are consequently larger, and size is a great consideration in show birds. (4) Yours would be quite all right for breeding with.

LARK DOING BADLY (Cock Lark).—I am not surprised that your Lark is not doing well when you tell me you have not changed his food for three years. You do not tell me what the food is, but any way he must have a change. I would advise you to get a pound of good insectile mixture and feed him on that for a time, mixing it crumbly moist with a little milk and boiled potato or scraped carrot. Put 5 drops of syrup of buckthorn in his drinking water for about six hours, and repeat two days later. You had better send to this office for the Nutshell booklet on the Skylark—post free 2d. It gives you directions for making several kinds of food, and other valuable information.

MULE BREEDING (A. O. Griffiths).—Your Linnet and hen Canary should do well together, away from the others. Give them a nest pan or small box and some moss and cow-hair. (2) The place you describe would do nicely for breeding purposes for the two other hens. I would advise you to turn in only one cock bird with them, either a Canary or a Goldfinch. If the birds are doing well on the food you are now giving them I would advise you not to change it. A little green food can be given daily; see that it is free from frost.

LINNET LOSING FEATHERS (J. W. Roberts).—Probably your Linnet is troubled with insects. You had better examine him very carefully and see if this is so, and dust him thoroughly with insect powder, rolling him in a cloth (with his head free) for about ten minutes. Put him in a thoroughly clean cage and repeat again every third day until he is free from them. If it is not this you are probably feeding him wrongly (you do not say what seed you use). Dissolve as much Glauber salts as will cover a sixpence in two tablespoonfuls of water and give him to drink for one day only, repeat two days later. Give him a spoonful of soaked seeds daily, and just smear the bare place with a little pure vaseline. I would advise you to send for our Nutshell booklet on the Linnet, 2d. post free.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

ROSY BREASTED COCKATOO (C. W. R.).—Your diet is about right, and unless your bird is thin and weak the cod liver oil emulsion is not needed; but this can always be given by dissolving a teaspoonful in a tablespoonful of boiling water, soak a biscuit in it, and when the biscuit is quite dry the bird should take it as usual. Keep its bowels moving quite freely, just short of being watery-lose, by doses of the fluid magnesia as required, and on the intervening days you can continue the use of the chemical food. Get a piece of a branch three or four inches thick and about nine inches long, and by the aid of a little binding will fasten this securely to one side of the cage; you can let the bird exercise its mandibles upon this, and need only renew it when it is all but cut away.

A SORE WING (Grey Parrot).—Treatment will largely depend on the extent to which the bird will permit you to handle it. The sore should be cleansed by lightly sponging with tepid water, dry with a soft cloth, then anoint lightly with spermaceti ointment, but do not use sufficient to run amongst and grease the plumage; if this should occur, then you sponge out the grease with tepid soapy water. While the trouble lasts keep its bowels moving quite freely by putting a teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water as often as may be required. If it becomes thin or weak try and give it a little cod liver oil emulsion daily, by spreading it thinly on bread, biscuit, or plain cake, or anything similar the bird will eat. Report progress in about three weeks.

WEST AFRICAN CANARIES (Micky).—It is quite probable that your birds are Weavers and not Serins; if so, the seasonal change of plumage would account for the fading colour, which would be renewed again at the next change. Add white millet seed to your mixture and give them a millet spray (Queries continued on next page.)

once a week; one or two mealworms per diem will be beneficial, as also will seeding and flowering grass as soon as you can get it free from frost. In case there should be a little disorder put one teaspoonful of Dinnford's magnesia in the drinking water once a week, and half a teaspoonful of chemical food (also in the water) twice a week, for about two months.

KEEPING BUDGERIGARS (H. T. W.).—If you follow closely the directions given in the booklet your birds should do well. Paddy rice (sometimes called chicken rice) can be obtained from most corn chandlers; if not obtainable in your district, then send to one of the large firms advertising in our pages for a supply. As a rule, red millet is rejected by the birds—that is the principal point against its use. Re greenfood, till it is safe to give seeding and flowering grass, a leaf of lettuce is about the best, but first cut out the fleshy centre stem. A little sweet apple is wholesome, but some individuals will not eat it. No, it is not too early now; leave them undisturbed.

EGG-BINDING (E. B.).—However strange it may appear to you, the weather is responsible for your losses, and during such weather birds in unheated indoor aviaries are more susceptible to this trouble than those in outdoor aviaries. I am afraid the only remedy is to check breeding by separating the sexes till the end of March, or a little longer if the season be a late one. On a bird showing signs of egg-binding put her in a small cage for a couple of days and keep her quite near the fire—80 degrees F. would not be too hot; of course, you must not return her to cool quarters again during severe periods. Also the bowels must be kept moving very freely (but not in a chronic state of watery looseness) by occasional doses of fluid magnesia in the drinking water.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Show Report (P. Clark).—You send neither heading, date, nor name of judge with the show report you have forwarded. If you will kindly furnish these particulars we shall be pleased to publish the report.

A Seed Sample (Novice A.S.).—The seeds sent are quite a nice sample of wild seeds, and would be useful as a "tit-bit" for Linnet and other British finches, but they should not, of course, form the whole of their diet. It is not possible to name each individual kind, but among them are various grass seeds, wild rapeseed, gold of pleasure, shepherd's purse, poppy, etc., with just a few grains of hemp.

POST MORTEM.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 2s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Clydesdale.—Death resulted from a toxemia following upon fatty degenerative changes in the liver. This arises from the ingestion of irritant or poisonous particles with the food. Although one may conform to correct rules of dieting, yet some samples of seed may contain fungi or even moulds which in small quantities would not appreciably alter its appearance to the unaided eye.

Singing Contests.

Announcements of forthcoming contests in the nature of advertisements must be paid for at advertisement rates, two words a penny.

PONTEFRAC.

Open Linnet contest, Woodman Inn, Horsefair, Mar. 23, 30 birds, 4 minutes' time singing: 1, Piper; 2, Blackshear; 3, Beard. The bird represented at the bottom of our picture is the Blue Whistling Thrush, one of the many species inhabiting the slopes of the Himalayas. Its plumage shines with an intense cobalt blue beautifully set off by the white spots which adorn the wing coverts. The other bird is the Pileated Jay, an American species distinguished by the gorgeous blue of its head and breast, contrasted by the golden yellow of its underparts. Both are magnificent birds for an aviary, or caged separately in a suitably sized cage.

GENT'S AND BOYS' SUITS FREE!

Astounding Easter Offer for a few weeks only to "Cage Birds"
Readers! Send only a post card and save pounds.

Now readers, would you like a suit or pair of trousers absolutely free? Perhaps your boy also? A most astounding offer is being made by a well-known London firm! They have discovered a remarkable Holeproof Cloth. You can't tear it! Yet it looks just the same as £3 or £4 suitings. You can't wear it out, no matter how hard you wear it, for if during six months of solid hard grinding work every day of the week (not just Sundays), you wear the smallest hole, another garment will be given free! The firm will send a written guarantee in every parcel. Think, readers, just 15s. 3d. for a man's suit, and only 4s. 9d. for a pair of trousers, or boy's suit 5s. 11d., knickers 2s. 3d., guaranteed for six months' solid grinding wear, and replaced free of charge if hole appears.

The Cloth.

As previously stated, this really marvellous cloth is absolutely untearable—you cannot tear it, no matter how hard you try; but possibly the thought arises that being of such hard-wearing quality, it must resemble in some shape or form the ordinary old-fashioned cord. That is not so. Side by side with the very latest designs in tweeds, and the best of our fancy worsteds, readers without testing the cloth would be unable to say which was holeproof and which was ordinary tweed. It is absolutely identical in appearance, and for considerably less than a sovereign, it is possible to obtain the design and colouring which in ordinary tweeds could not be procured under £3 or £4. The designs are suitable for office and best wear and field or rough wear, so that readers, whether at work or at leisure, need have no hesitation in wearing garments made from this remarkable cloth. The cloth could not be torn by a barbed wire fence, it is quite impossible to tear it, and the manufacturers predict that just as soon as the public learn of its remarkable wearing qualities, ordinary tweeds and serges will become a thing of the past. For your boys it is the very cloth.

Prices Extraordinary.

The prices of garments in this holeproof cloth are truly remarkable—of course, they are cut very low, more or less, to induce the public to test the cloth. It is possible to procure a really well-cut, smartly-finished suit consisting of jacket, vest, and trousers for the absurd sum of 15s. 3d., whilst a pair of trousers guaranteed for six months' solid hard wear could be obtained for merely 4s. 9d., or gent's riding, cycling, or walking breeches for 6s. 3d. Boys' Suits from 5/11, knickers 2/3.

Method in Making.

Readers naturally ask the question, can these goods be well made for the money? Here again is the result of the employment of modern methods and machinery, the outcome of years of experimentation, which have rendered it possible to supply a suit of clothes for 15s. 3d., which our grandfathers could not possibly have obtained at anything like treble the price. As an instance of the labour-saving devices, it must be mentioned that every sewing machine used in the making of these garments is driven by electric power; no work except the actual guidance of the garments through the machine falls on the worker, with the result that double and treble the quantity of garments can be turned out with absolute assurance that every garment is really well made. This is one instance of how the method carried from the beginning to the end of the business has resulted in a better and cheaper article for the public.

The Result.

Readers would do well to investigate this offer at once, before the rush, and the result to themselves will be a considerable saving of money in their tailoring bills, besides being able to wear garments made from a cloth which looks really smart, and yet will wear even better than the ordinary common cords.

Generous Free Samples for Readers.

To induce readers to give this remarkable cloth a trial, the manufacturers offer to send (if readers will send merely a 4d. postcard asking for free samples) a generous supply of cloth cuttings, fashions, and a most remarkable measurement chart, which will enable readers to measure themselves as well as any tailor could measure them. This will be sent absolutely free of charge by return of post. Readers must not delay a day, but should study the advertisement beneath, and send a postcard for the free samples of cloth cuttings. Remember, send now, while prices remain low.

SEASONABLE TIPS FOR BIRDKEEPERS.

Weeds are coming along now. Make use of them.

Grouse, chickweed, and dandelion are all grand bird foods.

Canaries are especially fond of chickweed. Give it them as soon as it carries ripened seed pods.

EVERY GARMENT GUARANTEED TO WEAR SIX MONTHS OR REPLACED FREE.

Remarkable Cloth—Won't Tear—Won't Wear Out—Absolutely Holeproof! Your Boy must have a Suit!

We will give any reader a pair of Trousers, Breeches, or complete Suit, free of charge, if he can wear the smallest hole in six months, no matter how hard he wears goods. We have discovered a really remarkable cloth that will not tear or wear out—absolutely holeproof, looks exactly as finest tweeds and serges, made in all the most up-to-date designs and suitable for farm and rough wear or office and best wear. The Woodlark in Captivity.

By W. E. TESCHEMAKER, B.A.

In this, the concluding instalment of his most interesting article, the author tells how to keep and feed the Woodlark in captivity.

THE Woodlark, although largely an insectivorous bird, will, if caught in mid-winter, be easily induced to eat canary seed and crushed hemp; but if we want to bring him on quickly to song we shall have to supply a really nutritious stock-food. I think that I have tried most of the advertised foods, and have found some of them good and some of them, like the curate's egg, good in parts, but most of them seem to be open to one objection, namely that they consist of substances which have to a great extent lost their freshness and nutritious qualities.

Have "Dried Flies" any Value?

For instance, take the case of the "dried flies" of commerce. I do not for one moment doubt that, when the so-called "dried fly" swam in his native element in Mexico he was a useful and self-respecting member of society, but, if we examine him in the condition in which he is offered to us in this country, we cannot conscientiously say that he is really anything but dust and a smell.

I would not for worlds say anything to hurt the feelings of a "dried fly," even in his defunct and desiccated state, and I do not forget that we shall all of us be dust some day, nor do I overlook the possibility that Nature will use our component parts again and make of them something, or somebody, better than we have been; my point is simply that while we are in the dust stage we shall not be of any use as an article of diet, and this is the only charge that I bring against the "dried fly."

An Inexpensive Stock-food.

Let us see if we can devise a more nutritious food. We will purchase a sponge-cake for the sum of one halfpenny, and one pennyworth of liver; we boil the latter, and allow it to dry. We then grate the sponge-cake and add rather less than a third of the grated liver, adding also a pinch of maw seed. On two days of each week we shall add some crushed hemp seed and on other days a little crushed canary seed, or grated walnut, or Spanish chestnut or Marie biscuit for a change.

For these various processes you will find a Walsh's hemp-mill very useful, and very cheap. The above mixture will keep fresh and good for several days and, though I can not guarantee that it will make your Woodlark sing, I can at least say that my Woodlarks have done well on it.

Your Lark will also want a little live insect food daily. The "Fancier's Delight" recommends "gentles that you fish withal." In a former article we extolled the merits of gentles for the Nightingale and, of the two Nightingales then mentioned, one, "Many," is still with us and sang splendidly last year, whilst the other ("Antony") was gathered to his fathers last spring in the sixth year of his captivity. Our opinion therefore of gentles is unchanged, but we have not found the Woodlark very partial to them. The beginner will probably have to use mealworms, and should be careful not to give more than eight a day, even to a bird in full song.

The Woodlark in the Aviary.

This species makes a delightful aviary bird; he lives most peaceably with all his neighbours, and can be guaranteed not to strafe even the most defenceless of the latter. My friend Mr. Saggitt, of Cleethorpes, had a charming experience with a pair of Woodlarks in his aviary a few years since, a brood of young being reared until they were feathered and almost ready to leave the nest. I never succeeded in inducing the species to nest here until last summer, when two young were reared, only living, however, to the age of one month, at which time they were probably barely independent. I shall try again.

I will once again, before I close, impress upon the beginner that the Woodlark is a difficult subject. It will do very well in a cage for a time and sing charmingly, but the moult is a most critical time, and unlike the Skylark, even if it survives the moult, it will not sing as well in its second year. I would therefore earnestly recommend him to buy his Woodlark in mid-winter and to let it sing to him during February, March and April; but when "fair, fresh May" comes tripping in, wreathed with flowers, open the cage-door and let it spread its wings and flit away, free as the wind that bloweth whither it listeth, to the dim blue hills and wide free spaces, where it would be.

Twitterings.

Mr. A. Walton, sec., East Ardsley C.B.S., writes that he has removed from 132, Bradford Road, to 4, Woodhouse Lane, East Ardsley, near Wakefield.

Mr. A. E. Thorpe, Park Villas, 28, Park-grove, Levenshulme, writes that he has now taken over the duties of secretary for the Ardwick and Manchester Dist. C.B.A., and will be glad to answer any communication re same.

Messrs. Witherby and Co. announce for immediate publication a "Life" of the late W. B. Tegetmeier, the eminent naturalist. The author of the book, which is entitled "A Veteran Naturalist," is Mr. E. W. Richardson, a son-in-law of Mr. Tegetmeier. There is an introduction written by Sir Walter Gilbey shortly before his death.

OBITUARY.

Mr. H. Gregory, Llanelly.

Kindly notify, writes Mr. G. H. Davies, hon. sec. Llanelly C.B.S., the great loss our society has sustained through the death of our esteemed member, Mr. Hy. Gregory, son of the old veteran, Mr. T. J. Gregory, who passed away on March 31, leaving a widow and three children to mourn his loss. I can assure you we can ill afford to lose a fancier who had always given his best to the society, and was a fanter to the backbone. Our sincerest sympathy goes out to the widow and dear ones who have to suffer this terrible blow.

In the April number of "British Birds," Messrs. Witherby, High Holborn, are publishing monthly, Miss E. L. Turner continues her articles entitled "Wait and See Photography." Mr. P. G. Ralle contributes further "Maux Ornithological Notes," and Mr. C. J. Carroll tells of a Siskin colony in Tipperary. An interesting item is an obituary notice by Mr. C. B. Moffatt, of the veteran Irish ornithologist Dr. Robert Warren, whose death at the advanced age of 86 was the result of an accident.

A Good Example.

Mr. J. A. T. Woodhall, vice chairman, Sheffield O.S., writes that his society has invested £75 of its funds in Treasury bonds.

A Law to Himself.

When Sir William MacGregor, the former Governor of Queensland, was in Fiji, he found the residents much addicted to the caging of wild birds, says the "British Australasian." Soon these began mysteriously to disappear in the night, the simple reason being that Sir William went around opening the cage doors after dark.

Dates of 1916 Bird Shows.

Further shows for which dates have been fixed are: Bacup Roller C.C., Nov. 24-25; Beamish C.B.S., Oct. 21; Aberdare C.B.S., Nov. 23. Secretaries should make a note of these and other dates as they are published, so that clashing may be avoided as far as possible.

Her First Snowball.

Accompanying two pretty photographs sent to "Country Life," showing a Blue-fronted Amazon in the snow, is the following letter, signed "Ski":—"Enclosed is the photograph of a green Parrot from the Amazon. It has only been about two years in this country, but is a very hardy bird, and is very cross if it is not taken out every day, if only for a few minutes. It flew from my hand into the snow and was delighted with it. It walked about in it, as seen in the photograph, and for a long time would not allow itself to be picked up or taken into the house. It was also very pleased when it was put to sit on a large snowball and began at once to converse loudly about 'Polly' and 'Pretty Poll' though it had been rather silent for several days previously, when the weather was too bad for it to go out at all."

"I have not been able to answer all the enquiries I have had for Norwich Greens during the last fortnight from my advt. in CAGE BIRDS."—R. JENKINS (Widnes).

"Please thank, through CAGE BIRDS, those who applied for British Birds advertised last week. I have been able to answer only those who enclosed stamp. They are all sold and I have had lots of P.O.s and cheques to return."—J. WILSON (Norton, Malton).

"I had 15 letters by first post on Saturday in reply to my advt. in CAGE BIRDS, and no doubt I shall get dozens more. I always do when advertising in CAGE BIRDS. I am trying to answer all who sent stamps; others I cannot reply to. It's marvellous where the money comes from; the dearer the birds, the better they sell."—T. W. WREN (Oxford).

Cornish Choughs in Manxland

A pair of Cornish Choughs are still nesting yearly in the Isle of Man, says Mr. P. G. Ralle in "British Birds." The mine building in which the nest was originally placed having been demolished, the birds have established themselves in a group of ruined mine buildings about a mile higher up the same valley.

Birds as a Table Decoration.

"Pearson's Weekly" says that a certain Society hostess who has always been famed for her wonderful collection of singing birds has recently trained a little party of Finches to act as a table ornament, perched upon a miniature tree in the very midst of things. And the idea has proved a very popular one among her guests, several of whom have gone in for "live" decorations themselves on quite daring lines.

Sparrows and Larch Trees.

Sparrows are now turning their attention from the fading crocuses to the larch trees. They wantonly destroy the tiny flowers, familiar to few who are not botanists; that bring a pink flush upon larches just before the trees burst into the loveliest shade of green known to nature. They do not eat the flowerets of the larch, but merely peck them off out of sheer devilry. This is why so few cones are found on larch trees where Sparrows abound.—"Westminster Gazette."

In the Courts.

Sunday Bird-catchers Fined.

At West Ham Police Court, Robert Mann and Robert Mann, jun., father and son, of Nicholl-st., Haggerston, were charged with cruelly abusing and torturing three Linnets in captivity, and with taking 18 wild birds on the marshes at Temple Mills on Sunday. A constable said the prisoners had three Linnets braced to sticks stuck in the ground. They also had two dead Linnets, and 18 freshly caught birds. Prisoners pleaded guilty to catching the birds, but denied having any braced. They stated that they were using two dead birds as decoys. They were each fined £2; and the Magistrate ordered the birds to be liberated and the nets and apparatus to be destroyed.

Cruelty to Chaffinches.

At Epsom Thomas Holden, 46, Retford-st., Kingsland-rd., London, Richard Covill, 9, London-st., Bethnal Green, and Arthur Herring, 50, Pritchard-rd., Hackney were charged with cruelly torturing six Chaffinches by keeping them in captivity.—A constable met the defendants carrying a cage and a basket, and followed them to the railway station, where he examined the cage and found in it six Chaffinches; in the basket was a decoy bird. One of the Chaffinches was bleeding under its wings, and when liberated was able to fly only a short distance. All the birds were in a very terrified state.—Covill was fined 15s., and Holden and Herring 10s. each.

Singing Contests.

Announcements of forthcoming contests in the nature of advertisements must be paid for at advertisement rates, two words a penny.

WESTHOUGHTON.

Open contest, Rock Hotel, Ap. 2, for time and quality. 51 birds entered, 41 minutes sing. 1, 4. Fairhurst, 173 and 64; 2, Murphy, 146; 3, Donnelly, 130. Quality, 1, Knowles; 2, 4, Peet; 3, J. W. Jones. Timers, J. Murphy, Maloney; minutes, J. Whittle; tappers, Bradley, Dawes; judges, T. Statham, S. Rigby.—Disley, Sec.

PONTEFRAC.

Linnet contest club sing, Woodman Inn, Horse-fair, April 1; very nice singing was heard. 45 entering for four minutes' time singing: 1, 2, Blackshear; 3, Beard; 4, Scottson. Open Linnet contest, April 2, another good muster; 46 facing the starters for three minutes' time singing: 1, 2, Blackshear; 3, Scottson; 4, Beard. Monthly meeting, April 8, at 7.—J. Beard, Hon. Sec.

BARNESLEY.

Dove Inn Linnet Club, April 1st, for four minutes' time sing, Shepherd timer, Waring chalker. Ireland to the front again: 1, Dooley, 3min. 33sec.; Davis and N. Coles shared, 3.27 each; Hardman, 3.16; Jones, 3.14. April 2, same timer, etc.; 1, Hardman, 3min. 52sec.; 2, Jones, 3.35; 3, Dooley, 3.30; 4, Wright, 3.13. We will sing any club in Yorkshire for single time singing for 40 sappers and give them their own window for best of club members, any time this Easter. A letter to above will secure a deposit.—J. Hardman, Hon. Sec.

LEEDS.

Open contest for quality Linnets, singing, Clarence Hotel, Skinner Lane, Leeds, April 3. 18 birds sang, and some grand singing was heard. Our host, who is home on leave, added three special prizes: 1, 2, A. Binns; 3, H. Wigfield. Judges, C. Taves, S. Butterfield, and T. Summers.—W. Lyman, Sec., 8, Harold Terr.

Leeds Linnet and Canary F.A., Albion Hotel, Saville Green, York-rd. Open contest for quality Linnet singing, Ap. 1; 36 birds sang for 5 prizes. 1, 4, Jim Chippindale; 2, Hayes; 3, Wigfield; 5, A. Capturing the German Canary Trade.

How the Scheme is Progressing.

Valuable Suggestions from Our Readers. Generous Help for Our Wounded Soldiers.

Amongst the offers of assistance we have received during the past week are those we have the pleasure of publishing in our present issue. They comprise pairs of Canaries already mated, pairs ready for mating, stock cages, breeding cages, appliances, etc.

Also we have had many applications from soldiers who have "done their bit," and are incapacitated from ever again earning anything in occupations which involve manual labour.

A Committee to be Formed.

We hope almost at once to be able to bring into communication the generous givers on the one hand and the deserving cases on the other hand, and as a preliminary we are taking steps to organise a committee of influential and well-known London Canary breeders.

We should like to include on this committee provincial breeders as well as those living in London, but as it would be necessary for the members to attend at frequent meetings, and it is important that this attendance should be only at such inconvenience to themselves as is unavoidable, we have thought it better, for the present at least, to ask only London fanciers to aid us in our proceedings.

As soon as we have obtained the consent of a representative number among those whom we are approaching in the matter we shall call a meeting, in order that the scheme be given an immediate start.

Once it is in working, we are certain that its good work will continue. The possibilities are unbounded; the immediate results will be that many deserving cases will meet with assistance, and the ultimate result should be that an industry will be founded which will place our country in a position to supply the markets of the world with the Canaries for which she is already famous, as well as those which are bred entirely for their singing qualities. The production of the latter has been for generations a monopoly of our enemies. Let it never again be such.

The letters we publish this week will speak for themselves, and it is only necessary for us to thank the writers for their kind suggestions, and to assure them that each one will receive full consideration.

Philanthropy and Commerce.

A word, however, may be as well in answer to a part of the letter of Mr. A. G. Cant. He says that we are confusing philanthropy and commerce together, and that we must dismiss philanthropy altogether if we are to capture German trade.

We are sorry that anything we have said has led Mr. Cant to believe that we "expect to capture German trade by providing inexperienced soldiers with one or two pairs of birds."

What we expect to do, with the help of British fanciers who realise what our wounded soldiers have done for us, is to provide the brave men who have "done their bit" with a pleasurable, easy, and profitable spare time occupation, an occupation which would not impose too severe a strain upon a war-worn constitution or a partially crippled body, and which would at the same time furnish the means of supplementing the inadequate allowance officially awarded by a grateful Government.

What we hope to do is something quite different, and entirely independent from the philanthropic side of the question; that is, to establish in our own country an industry which would be able to supply the world's demand for singing birds, and thereby divert many thousands of pounds yearly from going into the pockets of the enemies of civilisation.

The suggestions offered by Mr. Last and others will help us in the latter portion of our task, and the generosity of our readers will ensure the success of the first part of our undertaking.

Help Through the Daily Press.

Sir,—In last Thursday's issue of the "Daily Mirror," there appeared a picture of a wounded soldier and some Canaries. If you are helping any of our wounded boys to obtain birds I shall be very pleased to give three or four hens, which I have left over from last year's breeding.

A Word to the Roller Clubs.

Sir,—I have pleasure in enclosing 5s. for the Disabled Soldiers' Canary Fund. I expect you will hear from the other Roller Canary Clubs when they have had their usual monthly meetings. It is against the German roller trade that the battle has to be fought, and it is for the clubs to be on their mettle now to second your effort to the best of their ability. So far as concerns contributions in money and kind, we may be sure they will not fail, but when the commercial aspect is concerned co-operation between the clubs is necessary, and I would suggest that the advice and help of the exporters of repute should be sought for. We must lose no time, but the slack season for dealing is practically with us now, and there is therefore leisure to prepare. Foresight and preparedness are the watchwords; let the strong, energetic and patriotic ones now show what they can do.

A Nursing Sister Will Help.

Sir,—I see by the "Western Morning News," that it is suggested that wounded soldiers should breed Canaries. I have two flight cages, one breeding cage, also one or two smaller cages. If they would be of any use I would give them for the use of soldiers, if the carriage could be paid; they are in good condition.

Saltash.

SISTER IN CHARGE.

Sir,—I have read in your paper your suggestion to supply wounded soldiers with Canaries and cages, and I have much pleasure in putting down my name for three Norwich hen Canaries, and one double-compartment breeding cage with all accessories, and shall be pleased to forward them carriage paid, and free of all charge, to any address you like to name, for the use of our wounded soldiers.

Tower Hill, London. STANLEY THORNE.

Sir,—It will give me great pleasure to help to do anything in the way of birds and cages to assist you in the hobby for our wounded soldiers.

I will give to any one or two wounded soldiers in Somerset, two breeding cages (singles) and six good others 16 x 10. I would send them carriage paid with one pair of Canaries, and if it is possible to get you any more I will do so. I wish your undertaking every success.

Weston-super-Mare.

H. TRAPNELL.

Sir,—With regard to your scheme for soldiers breeding Canaries. If they are prepared to pay rail fare on the cages I can give them with pleasure five cages and a drying cage.

One is a Norwich flight cage 5ft. long, 12in. high, and 10in. wide, fitted complete; two are three-compartment breeding cages 3ft. 6in. long; and two are double moulting cages 24 by 9 by 10.

The drying cage is complete with lamp and thermometer, and the other cages are also fitted complete. I have also several extras which could be included, as I am giving up owing to ill-health.

(MRS.) J. A. MACQUEEN.

Malvern Link.

A Co-operative Suggestion.

Sir,—I have been greatly interested in your suggestion re capture of German Canary trade. I think, however, you are confusing two things, one philanthropy, the other commerce. The first, I think, we can dismiss at once if our object is to capture German trade. I do not suppose there is a member of the fancy the length and breadth of our land who would not help one of our "boys" if in need, but, with all respect to your correspondents, it seems to me almost worthy of "Punch" to expect to capture German trade by providing inexperienced wounded soldiers with one or two pairs of birds.

I am quite convinced that we can and ought to capture this trade, but I am inclined to think some co-operative plan would be the way to do it. I would suggest the following as a rough idea.

A limited company to be formed, with 2s. 6d. shares, but membership not to be restricted to shareholders. A committee to arrange details, such as breed of birds required, prices, etc. A central depot, with branches. Members to be able to obtain pairs for breeding from the central depot or branches, and at the end of the season to sell their young stock to the society at a fixed price, notified at beginning of season. The central committee either to dispose of these young birds to dealers or export them direct.

Anyone unable to afford to buy birds for breeding could have one or more pairs lent to them, payment for which could be deducted from the sales of the young stock. This is, I feel sure, the right direction to move, and the above is simply a rough idea of the lines to take.

Purley. E. C. LAST.

A Pound's Worth from Erin.

Sir,—I heartily agree with your splendid idea of enabling our disabled "Tommies" to have another "dig" at the "Hun" by breeding Canaries, and thus assist in the capture of the German export Canary trade.

Apart from export, I think it is a great pity that we cannot meet the home demand. Your "3s. 6d. a pair" correspondent last week cannot be one of the present-day business men, and though I am convinced he means well, I know he is putting prices at what we might call "zero."

In 1914 I bred eight hens and six cocks (common), obtained 82 young in three rounds, and, after giving 13 cocks as presents, and paying all expenses, had a balance of £11. I can prove this, as I keep an exact account of all transactions.

I would suggest that you would first try to assist ex-fanciers who have "done their bit" and got "worsted." Time enough to help inexperienced men when we give the required assistance to our brave chaps who had to give up one of the finest hobbies in the world. We want quick results, big supplies, and no bungling if at all possible.

Unfortunately I have disposed of all my surplus stock, but would be pleased to promise a good pair of Yorkshires (value £1), and properly matched, to any ex-fancier you may mention. Wishing your great and patriotic object every success.

"IRISH, AND PROUD OF IT."

Belfast.

Some Suggestions from Ealing.

Sir,—I have been watching your scheme of capturing the Canary trade, and think the idea an excellent one. It will be a big job, but I see no reason why we should not breed all we want. An organisation needs forming, which will act as a medium between breeder and purchaser, so as to ensure the breeder disposing of all he can breed at a profitable price.

As the scheme grows it would be as well to have districts mapped out with a representative of the organisation in each who would be in touch with the centre. Shows could be encouraged to give more classes for singing birds, and possibly a gift class, the entries in which could be sold for the benefit of the fund.

All the birds sold through the organisation would have to be kept at a high level, so that a good reputation may be obtained and the best value secured. Also, as one of the chief considerations, prices would have to vary with the season, etc. A small commission would have to be deducted for working expenses.

A small committee, perhaps, would be best for selecting the birds when a number have been sent in, and that opens up another question, that of house room for the stock till passed on to the dealers, shopkeepers, etc., who apply to the organisation for birds.

Shopkeepers who sell the organisation birds might have a large notice provided to display the fact that they sell birds bred by soldiers wounded in the great war of 1916.

All breeders should be registered with the organisation, and those who supply birds should be willing to throw their bird rooms open to inspection to make sure no unhealthy birds are received, for it would scarcely be practicable for the organisation to put all birds received into quarantine.

It will be a fine scheme, and a big one, but not too big to be tackled successfully. I should like to mention many more items, but this letter is already too long, so must leave them for the present. I shall be pleased to do what I can to help. I wish the scheme success; nay, it's going to be a success, undoubtedly. A start should be made this season if possible.

HOW TO PAIR YORKSHIRES.

By Sergt. A. Thomas (Wokingham)

Keep Some Pairs for Breeding Stock.

WHEN pairing up it is well to remember to have one or two pairs up for breeding our own stock birds; then in the following year we can again blend some of those youngsters in with the show birds. Unfortunately two good show birds will not often throw show birds, as the usual thing is for the birds to deteriorate in size, and more often than not the result of such pairing is that the young are undersized.

Having found out the faults in the birds, we proceed to pair up. Supposing we start by running the buff cocks out into show cages, and one yellow hen. The hen being the most important factor in breeding we will make the cocks suit the hens.

Remember that where a fault lies in one bird, that bird must be paired with another bird which is extra good at that point. Avoid coarse, heavy beaks, especially as they are usually accompanied by coarse heads.

Don't use a cock bird with a flat head, it is not so bad a fault in the hen. A flat head is easy to detect, for the eye is almost on the top of the head instead of being placed exactly in the centre of it. The flat head is generally accompanied by eyebrows, making the bird appear sulky.

Pay attention to the neck. The yellows are not as a rule so well filled as the buffs. It should be shaped after the manner of a champagne bottle. Square shoulders are not so objectionable in a stock bird, but it must have a partner with a very nicely rounded shoulder. If a bird's shoulders are well filled in a nicely rounded back will always accompany them.

Some Important Plumage Characters.

Short flighted birds, and those with hollow backs, should be rejected, both these are very glaring faults, but do not discard a bird because he has slightly crossed wings, if he is good otherwise. The Yorkshire being a very narrow bird, it is hard to breed them with perfect wing carriage. Then again, some of the wings have a droop. If the one fault is matched carefully against the other we are making progress. Good wing carriage, viz., tips just meeting, indicates a well filled back.

A wide or open tail is a minor fault, but still it goes against a bird. It should be long and round like the stem of a clay pipe. Hence the saying of the reporters, "nice pipe tail." A fish tail is a blemish, but not important. The worst fault in the tail is the bird which lets it habitually drop. The tips of the wings should rest on the tail and the latter should be in a straight line from the head and back. Once you get dropped tail well into your stock it will take years to breed it out.

Now, just one more point. Your birds may be ever so good, and yet they may lack just one little point which makes all the difference between that glorious "first" and, say, "the." I refer to the "Swagger," without which a Yorkshire is hopeless in anything like hot competition.

Where the Belgian Comes in.

This trait we must get from the Belgian blood, but it is not wise for a beginner to introduce it direct, for the simple reason that it takes three or four generations to breed out the faults introduced by the Belgian, viz., the high shoulder, thin neck, and snaky head. It is much better to get a quarter-bred Belgian, and see that it contains no Scotch Fancy blood.

You may improve the size in your stock by double buffing, but see that you use good quality buffs, as the tendency is to get rough feather round the waist. Keep the youngsters so bred which have long wings and sides, they are worth taking care of. I have done little or no good by double-yellowing. By it one loses size, and there is a tendency to show openness of feather.

Inbreeding, judiciously, is not harmful; it is in some cases desirable, especially if you wish to fix some particular point in your strain. I do not think it is wise to inbreed with brother and sister. When I have done so I did more harm than good. Cousins are plenty close enough.

Don't be afraid after you have paired up and the hen has gone to nest, and reared her first brood of youngsters, to change a cock or a hen if you think that a particular pair of birds are throwing bad youngsters. If there is not a decent bird in a nest of say, four youngsters, there is little likelihood of there being a Palace winner in the second round.

Money in Canaries.

SIR.—I feel I should express my gratification for the results of my first advert. in CAGE BIRDS. My young Norwich were snapped up immediately by cash buyers, and I have received both money and enquiries from English, Scotch and Irish fanciers, in some cases for birds which I had not got and had not mentioned in my small advert.

This pleasant experience proves three things: That advertising does pay—at least, in CAGE BIRDS; that there is a phenomenal demand for decent Norwich Plainheads; and that the Fancy has gilt-edged possibilities for sick soldiers, of whom I am one.

The Song of the Canary.

SIR.—With regard to hen singing Canaries, Mr. Napper may be interested to know I have a Sib-bred hen Canary two years old (nested twice with a Goldfinch), which is a sweet songster. She will warble for 30 minutes at a stretch, and continue this throughout the day; her song is much like the Robin's when in his full song. She is in a large open cage with a cock Bullfinch, and they live together in perfect harmony. When the hen ceases her song, then Bullie begins, and frequently they sit side by side and sing for all they are worth. I have often remarked I would never wish for a sweeter songster, and for that reason I named her Jenny Lind. I have several singing birds, a Roller included, but none of their song, in my opinion, equals hers.

(Miss) F. GRAY.

SIR.—I did not intend adding to my previous notes, but some of my remarks seem to have pricked the susceptibility of our friend, Mr. B. Clark, judging by the tone of his last letter. I certainly had no intention of causing any pain or irritation—quite the contrary, but of course when we soar into type we should always remember that the sharp eyes of critics are upon our statements. By the way, few things please me more than when my blunders are corrected with an unsparring hand, for then each and all will be the richer.

I am afraid I must plead guilty as regards Cuckoos, for I know but little about Cuckoos, except that I am always delighted to hear them on their arrival, for then I know that "the spring and playtime of the year is come."

I have some dim recollection of your correspondent, Mr. J. Craig, and in long past years have often had a hearty laugh over his pert enquiries, and no doubt he has laughed too. He is now asking me another question, which no man can answer with decision. The creation of birds was so long ago, and so far away, that I am blown if I can remember much about it. The only thing I can now do for him is to ask another, Will he, or anyone, explain why some climbing plants twine from left to right, and others from right to left?

I think the domestic Canary, in all its numerous varieties, may be regarded as having been evolved from the original type under the domination of man, and many of us believe their songs vary as I have already described in my former notes, in consequence of imitation. If I remember aright, I think it was Mr. Vale who possessed a Canary which sang the Goldfinch's song beautifully. Speaking of Goldfinches, there are, as you know, distinct varieties of Goldfinches, the most dissimilar known to me being the pretty little Goldfinch of the Devonshire orchards, and the grey-headed Himalayan Goldfinch. These will, I think, interbreed, and no doubt produce fertile offspring, neither British Goldfinch nor Himalayan Goldfinch, but resembling both equally. It should therefore be quite possible to build up or create a distinct strain of Goldfinches, and no doubt the young cocks would imitate the songs of the Linnet, Canary, etc., if hatched and reared by Canaries, and, of course, where Goldfinch would never be heard by them.

The Grand National British Bird Show.

SIR.—I have got the above in fairly good working order now. The profits are to be given to the "Roll of Honour" Week Fund, for the widows and orphans of Liverpool soldiers and sailors who have fallen in the war. The Lord Mayor has granted his patronage, and promised us great help, and the venue will be St. Martin's Hall, noted for its comforts to exhibitors and visitors. The judges are: Mr. C. Houlton, Mr. H. J. Chick, and Mr. J. Bewick. These gentlemen have been nominated by exhibitors and fanciers whom I have come across and have written me.

Mr. George Green has kindly consented to act as show manager, and Mr. Clem Hillmen is giving me all the necessary assistance in the secretarialship work. We would like to pass over at least £50 to the fund. Seeing that every organisation in Liverpool and district is giving a charity performance, the cage bird fancy should not be behind.

There are some classes guaranteed, but there are not sufficient of these. Below I give a proposed classification, but a lot of the classes will have to be guaranteed if they are to be offered. Now exhibitors, come forward, please; but don't guarantee a class that is sure to be filled; help the doubtful class so that we can have a representative British show.

The Proposed Classification (50 Classes).

Goldf. H.M., Goldf. F.M., Bullf. H.M., Bullf. F.M., Linnet H.M., Linnet F.M., Lesser Redpoll H.M., Lesser Redpoll F.M., Greenf. H.M., Greenf. Hen Bullfinches and Hybrid Breeding.

SIR.—Again in answer to your correspondent "Canary-Bullfinch," I can see no reason to suppose that the cock Canary would become "exhausted" through being kept with the hen Bullfinch for the whole of the season. Whenever he starts to moult he loses all interest in his partner's behaviour, and she may build nests and lay eggs to her heart's content so long as she leaves him alone and does not expect him to take part. On the other hand, it would be folly, on the hen's account, to allow this, as she merely succeeds in exhausting herself to no purpose. One must use discretion.

What I meant to imply was that by keeping the Canary back one could arrange to get eggs while the cock was still at his best, and when the hen was reaching her prime. I should suggest the middle of June as a likely time to give one or two chances. I think that Canaries are considerably later moulting if kept out of doors. I know I have had a hen hatching eggs in October in my outdoor aviary, though this was rather exceptional. The same hen started very early, too. I would repeat my suggestion of plenty of fresh green food for the hen, and an occasional mealworm and a few grains of hemp most days. I don't believe in egg food as it makes them too rank.

I have just taken out of my aviary a cock Goldfinch and a young hen Bullfinch, and have put them in an aviary 12ft. by 6ft. by 6ft. 7in. high, which they will have to themselves for the season. They are what is called "in the pink of condition," and I have every hope that they will pair and have some success. If I remember to do so, I will write and record when they start building, although with this extraordinary weather one cannot prophesy as to what will happen. I have a cock Bullfinch in the large aviary, out of which I took her, for as I noticed that she had begun to flirt with him I deemed it advisable to separate them, as I could not bear to think of breaking their hearts later on. He did not seem to take much notice of her overtures, but I am amused now, about a week later, to see him making advances to my old hen Greenfinch who, if she will have him, will make him a satisfactory partner from his point of view, though I am bound to confess that the cock Bullfinch as a breeder with other species proves himself nothing but a failure.

This hen Greenfinch, by the way, is a splendid breeder, and will rear any amount of babies, and I am looking to her to help should I be fortunate in securing fertile eggs from the hen Bullie. This will be her fifth season in my aviary, and each year she has had four or five nests. She usually begins in March, but this year it is too stormy.

My stock mixture consists of best canary, tealze, and rape seed only, and every now and again I give a scatter of wild seed mixture or a few grains of hemp. In summer they get any amount of green foods, I believe in plain food, and not too much of it during the winter. I think it is more natural than giving fattening foods, and my birds are always in A1 condition.

(Mrs.) G. CHRISTIE.

Early Canaries.

SIR.—Referring to Mr. Hill's statement of early Canaries, I have a nest of young Norwich which were hatched on Feb. 14. I think this beats his Rollers by a fortnight, also Mr. Richmond's. The hen is on with her second nest, and I expect young on Friday, April 6. This is my first start at Canary breeding, and I think it is a good one.

A Recipe for Mahogany Stain.

SIR.—Here is a very good varnish for bird cages. Take 1 pint of methylated spirit and mix in it about 1/2 of a thimbleful of Bismarck brown dye. When dissolved, add 6ozs. of shellac, and let stand overnight. Apply with a camelhair brush, three or four coats. If too light, add more Bismarck brown dissolved in a little spirit. If too thick add more spirit; if too thin, more shellac.

If only one cage is to be stained get 4d. worth of wood naphtha and add two handfuls of shellac, with a little Bismarck brown.

HANDY MAN.

Oxalic Acid for Insect Pests.

SIR.—I thank T. C. Clayton and other fanciers for the interest they have taken in this subject. When I made enquiries I did not know how long I might have to wait, and wanting to get in order for the breeding season I set to at once and did some spare cages with oxalic acid and lime. I put the birds in them, cleared the bird-room out, gave it two coats, and had the floor done with some in water.

I gave all the cages two coats inside and out, and not knowing what quantity to use, I dissolved four ounces of oxalic acid and added it to a bucket of lime. That is about as much again as Mr. Clayton says, and the birds have now been in it nearly a month and they are in the pink, but I shall follow Mr. Clayton's instructions next time. Don't put washing soda in the water for cleaning the floor with any of the acid, for it makes it boil.

Colour in Norwich Plainheads.

Its Origin and Its Importance.

SIR.—In noting with a good deal of interest the reply of Mr. Frank Cole, I can assure him that, whilst burying his head in the sand and kicking up a cloud of dust with his feet, may tend to create a diversion, it will really deceive no one, least of all an old campaigner in these columns like myself.

Really what we have to consider is the fact that his letter now under review is in reply to mine of your previous issue, and I must frankly confess the miserable carcass of skin and bone my critic now serves up is certainly not worth the charge of powder and shot that brought it to my feet. By the tacit consent of silence, I gather he is not desirous of pursuing even as a matter of interest the question of the Lizard blood; and, this being so, I presume I am now free to handle his scheme for obtaining colour.

Briefly I gather the essential feature in his method is to introduce the green blood through both cock and hen, taking care that the strength of the green blood ensures the birds being more light than dark.

Even though such a pair will produce a percentage of clears, my critic should well know that as stock such birds are more potent in green blood than the parents, and it is very evident where breeders' operations are confined to not more than twelve pairs that the day is not far distant when nothing more than "circus horses" will prevail. To secure clear bred partners is, of course, somewhat easy, but under the scheme of my critic, which for success depends upon a full charge of green blood, to put it there, and then reduce it by means of clear blood, is, upon the face of it, a retrograde movement, and ridiculous.

Of course, I know that more than one outstanding bird has been produced by this "shot in the dark" method, but to fill your room with variegated and self-greens to obtain this "gift of the gods" is about as disastrous as the much-suffering paterfamilias who filled his house with girls in the hope of some day or night being presented with a son. Apart from this, the method is opposed to the ideal of the pioneers of our breed, who aimed at the rich brilliantly coloured clear, in which no trace of the green blood was in evidence; in short, a bird clear down to the skin, and free from streaked beak or stained toe-nails, the ideal the connoisseur fondly haudles today when he has the chance. Do the clears of my critic's method conform to the ideal? I know the usual classification which reads "Clear or invisible ticked" has tended to obscure the truly ideal clear, and a bird "as black as sin" beneath the surface has won, and will again win, in such classes, but all the same the beginner should ever fix his mind upon the ideal and pursue his methods to that end.

The fact that my critic has not yet grasped the elementary principles of colour production in our breed is no reason why others should follow suit. Some day he will realize that green blood, though apparently absolutely essential, is nothing more than in the nature of a post-dated cheque, which he is to be passed into the bank of the yellow blood to mature, and eventually become honoured. Bless my never say so! If green blood in itself, undiluted with yellow blood, would ensure the desired depth and brilliancy of colour, the Crests and Crestbreds of today would need to be exhibited in asbestos lined show cages, and shows would need to be fitted with an automatic sprinkler installation; not to mention the providing of a goodly stock of thirst quenchers for the judges and visitors, for what section of breeders, apart from the green varieties, have used more green and less yellow blood? Where are they for colour? Is it not a jolly good thing for a lot of the Crests and Crestbreds that they cannot see for themselves? Eh! What?

No, my friend, the breeders of note to-day, who are in the position of reviewing some solid experience, do not ask how much green blood can be put behind their stock, but really how little. Briefly, they have realised that good green blood plus yellow blood accomplishes more than green blood plus a bit more green blood. What imparts brilliancy to the colour? Is it green, or buff, or yellow blood?

If this is a little more of a "fertile imagination," which is always to be preferred to an "addled intellect," then Messrs. J. H. Payne, C. A. House, Geo. Gardner, and others are blessed or cursed the same way, for years ago these breeders, who used to matter, sung the praises of the green blood well mixed with the yellow. Lots of prominent breeders to-day join in the anthem; lots more could if they did the proper thing, but, instead, they will wish the devil had me for giving the game away. So helpful is the yellow blood that no wonder many breeders, to accelerate matters, and quickly raise the standard of their colour throughout the stock, resort to double yellowing, and with less than 20 per cent. of green blood can produce unbeatable colour. Fortunately, I have a little proof myself, for my unfledged clear yellow cock, who in a stinging class of 24 unfledged yellow cocks at our recent Cardiff Show, was so bred; nothing in the class beating him for colour, nor anything in the section, and he was clear down to the skin, and to the end of beak and toe-nails.

It is because I can put my back against living authorities, and stand upon my own experiences, that I find no need to handle this matter in ambiguous terms; but, nevertheless, allow me to point out that although double buffing to ensure success needs handling circumspectly, double yellowing needs it more, for under the happiest circumstances the effect is paralysing for a while.

What should be grasped is the characters of the buff and yellow plumage, which are diametrically opposed to each other. The buff feathers tend to breadth, and carry down, or underflue, to the end of shaft, whilst the yellow tends to narrowness of web and scantiness of feather furnishing. That is why, as a general rule, we pair yellow to buff, and that is also why the buffs are generally more solid and compact than the yellows. The double buffing occasionally considerably helps to fill the hollows and round off the bumps.

Therefore, seeing that in double yellowing you are doing without the useful compact and solid influence of the buff character, it is only reasonable to expect the double yellows to tend to a little slimmness or length and apparent loss of size. Actually your birds are of the same good size, perhaps, as the parents, but the absence of underflue, and a narrower class of feather tells the tale. Really to experience a minimum of penalty your yellows should be selected for breadth of webbing and wealth of furnishing—the more the better.

It is because of all this that breeders who have proved its worth, and do not mind whispering all about it in your ear, always tell you not to be disappointed with the double yellows, but to peg away and mate them up in the usual manner the following seasons, and there is not the slightest doubt about it that when you have really got going with a double yellow bred cock and hen, and perchance a double yellow bred buff cock and hen too, a much higher level of colour will be reached, and with more pleasure and profit, than by the extravagant wastage of green blood as supported by my critic. In conclusion, I am sure all readers will much appreciate the courteous response of my Devonport friend, and, incidentally, will note his support of my views and experience regarding cinnamon blood.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

PLUCKING ITS FEATHERS (A. Pearce).—Examine the cage thoroughly, and if you find any trace of insects overhaul it and eradicate them. Give a morsel of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut dusted with flowers of sulphur and then sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days add to the water ten drops of lemon juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence. Also give a fat mealworm daily for a time. Crush the head of worm and fasten it on the end of a perch with a pin.

AGE FOR BREEDING (R.I.B.A.).—No, a cock six years old that is healthy and active, and in full song, is not too old to mate, and a hen two years old, if also in good sound health and active will make a very suitable mate, other things, size, colour, markings, etc., being also suitable.

THROAT TROUBLE (J. C.).—Do I understand that there are visible signs of ulceration on the tongue? If so, make a little concentrated solution of boric acid; that is, dissolve in a little warm water as much of the acid as it will take up. Dip a small camel-hair brush in this solution, shake off the surplus fluid and dab on the bird's beak with it, repeating the process a few times each morning and evening for a few days. Also give a morsel of bread and milk, with a thin covering of "honey and borax," obtainable from any chemist, on it. If no ulceration is visible, add 20 drops of whisky, five each of oxymel of squills and ipecacuanha wine, and two of eucalyptus oil to the water, and shake well together every second day for a week or so, and see that the bird is not exposed to direct draughts or fumes of burning lights.

SHEDDING FEATHERS (F. James).—Well examine the cage, not the bird, to make yourself sure that there are no insect pests, or if any are found exterminate them. Continue giving the baths regularly as now. For the rest treat the bird, for a month if necessary, as advised to "Roller Novice" in this issue. The moulting is the cause of the bird not singing, and it will be quite useless minding him until it is quite recovered from this trouble.

CAUSE OF FAILURE (D. A. J.).—Considering the vile weather conditions we have had this spring, and the fact that your birds are in a cold room, the cause of their failure in the first round is sufficiently obvious—you put them up too soon. Give each bird now half a teaspoonful of egg food with about half that quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure and sesame mixed in it every second day. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle and linseed. Give a little fresh young dandelion daily to each. At the end of a week or so you may mate up again, and will doubtless find things go better in the next round.

SHOWS NO VIGOUR (Gorton).—Feed on a staple diet of three parts good sound canary and one part summer rape only, and otherwise treat it the same as advised to "Roller Novice," in this issue. It will be quite useless minding him until he has quite recovered from the moulting, and when this happens the song will doubtless return naturally.

STILL MOULTING (Roller, Novice).—The bird's condition is probably due to exposure to cold draughts, sudden and extreme fluctuations of temperature, or damp. See that these causes are removed and keep the bird in a fairly comfortable and equable place. Then give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion and four of sherry well mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed every second day, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet and broken groats, and add to the water 20 drops of a mixture made by dissolving half a drachm of ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine in an ounce of sherry and adding a teaspoonful of glycerine. Give a leaf of fresh dandelion daily. Continue this until the feathers have ceased dropping.

HUSKY ROLLER (Norton).—There is just a possibility of the voice being recovered during the spring, but one cannot say this will occur with any certainty, and the risk of permanent injury to the voice is very great. Keep it in a comfortable place well supplied with fresh, pure air, but free from direct draughts, dust, or irritating fumes. Twice a week give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, and a leaf of dandelion freshly gathered daily as soon as you can get it. Two days in every three for the next month or so give the following concoction instead of plain water for drinking, viz. Place a small teaspoonful of linseed and a piece of best liquorice, the size of a small hazel nut, in a teacup, fill with boiling water, cover, and allow to infuse by the fire for half an hour, stirring occasionally until liquorice is dissolved. Strain, and add to the clear liquid a teaspoonful of lemon juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a shilling, and stir still dissolved. When cold give in the drinker in place of plain water.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

DISINFECTING CAGES (C. G.).—Thoroughly scrub the cages with warm soda-water, adding a dash of Jeyes' Disinfectant, and using Lifebuoy or Coal Tar soap, and leave them out in the air as long as possible before putting any birds into them. (2) The cage you mention would be large enough for a pair of Hardbills. (3) Yes, the Crossbill should be included among the Hardbills. His diet should consist of sunflower, hemp and canary, 3 or 4 mealworms daily, and other insects for a change. Offer the core and pips of apples, smashed nuts and berries in season; also the cones of pine and fir trees, when quite ripe and about to open and spread their seeds. Maize, dani and wheat will sometimes be taken, and a change of food is good for them.

BRITISH BIRDS FOR AVIARY (Bullfinch).—I would advise you not to have more than one pair of Bullfinches, but the other pairs could be put in, or to make variety you might include a pair of Linnets or Greenfinches. No doubt some of them would attempt to breed if properly treated, but there is never any certainty about British birds doing so. (2) A good seed mixture would be canary 3 parts, teazle 2 parts, rape 1 part, with a few sunflower seeds daily and a mixture of other seeds such as hemp, niger, gold of pleasure, and maw 3 days a week, allowing a spoonful to each bird. All kinds of green food and wild seeds should be given freely. Hang up nest boxes, wicker nests and small cages, surrounding them with heather to give seclusion. Collect old nests, fine roots, moss and cow hair, and give them plenty to build with.

A NEW BEGINNER (Arthur Elton).—I am glad you like the paper, but I fear you have misread much by not taking it earlier. When your hens are ready to nest (which will be when they are in high condition, flying from perch to perch, constantly flapping their wings and calling, put one of them in a cage by itself, and then introduce its partner, either the Greenfinch or Linnet. If they get on pretty well together give them a nest-pan or box and some moss and cow-hair to build with. Your general management will be practically the same as for Canaries, and I would advise you to get our Nutshell booklet No. 5, post free 2d. It gives you all the information on feeding and rearing the young. You say one of your Yorkshire Canaries is singing, if so it must be a cock bird, not a hen as you state.

REFUSING GREEN FOOD (D. A. J.).—As a rule Goldies are quite ready to take their share of any green food that is being distributed. The kind you have been offering are not what they are particularly fond of, and you may have better success with dandelion and sow-thistle, but I think your best plan would be to place them in a cage with another bird that is a green-food eater, remove the seed box for a couple of hours, and then give them some. With a little perseverance you may succeed. There is also the possibility of their doing so when you are able to gather bunches of wild seeds, and dandelion seed heads. If you fail entirely I would advise you to soak some seeds and give a spoonful every other day until it is eaten; this will take the place of green food.

LINNET MULE BREEDING (A. Mack).—I see nothing unusual in the behaviour of your birds; the hen will frequently pull out the nesting material and lining, but if one waits until she is tired of doing so, and commences to sit in earnest, a new lining can be fastened in and another nest made for her. This should be done in the evening, just before the birds go to roost. You did wrong in breaking the egg; you cannot tell if a newly-laid egg is fertile, and you gained nothing by breaking it. Nutshell booklet No. 5 would help you in your treatment. (2) Two mealworms per day would be sufficient for your bird; you could vary these by collecting other insect life during the summer.

BREEDING WITH HEN LINNET (L. C. F.).—There is no dependence upon British birds for incubating and rearing the young, even in a large aviary. The best way is to give your bird the opportunity, and if she fails, remove the eggs the second time to a good breeding hen Canary. If you could get the Hybrids they would be much more valuable than the Mules.

BIRDS FOR AVIARY (Starter).—Seed-eaters would suit you for your aviary better than any others, and I would advise the following in pairs: Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Linnet and Siskin. If you have trouble in getting any of these, put in a pair of Greenfinches instead. These would be enough to commence with. See that the seed boxes are out of the reach of mice. Put in some nesting-places and give them some old nests and plenty of moss and cow-hair. Offer a plentiful supply of wild food during the spring and summer.

LINNET AND ROLLER CANARY (L. M. N.).—If yours is a good Roller he should not be allowed to hear the Linnet's song. (2) You can pair a Linnet with a Roller-hen, the young would make good singing Mules.

FEEDING CHAFFINCH AND GREENFINCH (Bird Lover).—These two birds require quite different treatment, and your best plan is to send for our two little booklets on them, 2d. each, post free. There is no end of information in them, much more than I can give you in these short replies. If in doubt shall be pleased to assist you.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

AILING BUDGERIGAR (J. B.).—Put the bird now on to a course of chemical food, with fluid magnesia at intervals (as per directions in previous reply), as necessary to keep the bowels moving quite freely, but not in a continuous state of watery looseness. Are you giving this bird grit? I do not mean ordinary bird sand, but flint grit; you can get such, properly prepared for small birds, from any of our large advertisers. A pinch over the sand-tray daily will suffice. As soon as you can get it, supply seedling and flowering grass liberally, as much as it will eat, but do not supply it while tainted with frost. Keep a millet spray in the cage, removing it when picked clean. Report progress in about a fortnight, by which time it ought to be nearly fit again.

AILING PARROT (G. Smith).—You cannot do better than continue the treatment already given until the bird's condition becomes quite normal. As regards the bird's foot, if it is as you suspect there is a dislocation or some similar injury to the toe, as the mere tearing out of a claw, though leaving a state of soreness for a time, would not prevent the bird gripping its perch properly; many birds lose claws, but this would not reduce it to the state you describe, and I consider especially as the accident or episode you refer to took place some time ago, you had better let a vet. examine the toe in question and see if it can be put right. I should add that a bird with one sound foot would not be likely to over-balance often in the manner you describe. The refusal to eat the seeds, etc., you name is no great matter.

ROSE-BREADED PARROT (A. W.).—The bird you describe is the Rose-breasted or Roscate Cockatoo. The price you name is rather stiff, unless it was already beginning to talk. Whether it is worth keeping is largely a personal matter for yourself; does it attract you, etc. I can only say that most Roseates make droll and clumsy pets, the majority do not talk much, others do a little better, while a few become quite talented. As soon as it is steady and not scared by members of the household passing near its cage, keep it in your living room, and if it has any aptness for speech it will pick up words and short sentences, which it hears, and similarly mimic cries and calls. When restless and you offer it some tit-bit, talk to it and repeat again and again some short sentence you would like it to utter.

BREEDING BUDGERIGARS IN KITCHEN CAGE (C. B.).—(1) If the temperature of the kitchen is changing up and down several times during the day, then it is an unsuitable place, and the Budgies will not thrive, but if you can find a corner for the cage that is well ventilated but not draughty, and the temperature fairly even (not changing every time a meal is cooked), then they should do well. (2) They should be paired up at once. It would have been better a fortnight earlier. (3) If you can manage to fix up four lunks, with their openings towards the light, and at least twelve inches apart, then you can put two pairs in the cage. (4) Yes.

SPICE FINCHES NESTING (A. C.).—These birds are shy breeders, and I should leave the nest pretty severely alone, or if you suspect it is infested with insects, examine it, and if it does not contain eggs remove it, catch the birds up and wash them in a tepid solution of quassia. With plenty of nesting material they will soon construct another nest. Your birds would be the better for some twiggy branches with buds just bursting, such as hawthorn, privet, rose, and twigs from fruit trees, and it now will be safe to give them garden weeds gathered about noon, by which time frost and dew will have disappeared. Once a week for next month fluid magnesia in the drinking water will benefit the birds—say a tablespoonful of the magnesia to half-pint of water. No need to cage them.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 2s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept in contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Major.—Norwich cock succumbed to septicaemia (not septic fever), a condition in which the blood becomes invaded by germs, which multiply and bring about their harmful influences. I would advise a very thorough system of disinfection of cages, and the administration to your remaining birds of some good blood tonic such as tincture of iron and quinine in doses of five drops daily in the drinking water.

Club Reports.

BOLTON ROLLER C.S.

Meeting, Headquarters, Mar. 14. Decided to hold annual open contest, Jan. 5 and 6. Secs. please note. The delegates' report on the Control Board meeting was endorsed. Mr. Norris's letter came too late for the meeting.—Jas. Kilshaw, Hon. Sec.

LARKHALL C.B.A.

Meeting, Y.M.C.A. Halls, Mar. 18; President in chair. Auditors gave their report, which showed the club in a sound position. Officers elected: Pres., Mr. J. Rindall; vice-pres., Mr. J. Kennedy; treas., Mr. C. Gibb; committee, Messrs. Cuthbertson, McLean, Melvin, Kerr, Campbell, Perry, Smith, and McEwan; sec., Mr. Thos. J. McGregor, 48, Sarafville Crescent, Larkhall.—T. J. McGregor, Sec.

PROVINCIAL ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, March 23, headquarters, Mr. Wareing presiding over a good attendance. Balance-sheet submitted showed a gain of 17s. 1d. for the season. Seven new members elected, including a lady member, this bringing the total of members elected this year to 16. Decided that no action be taken in respect of letter from B.R.C.C. until a further meeting of clubs in Manchester in February has been held.—J. T. Smith, Hon. Sec.

ABERDARE C.B.S.

Meeting, Mar. 21, Miller's Restaurant, Mr. T. Davies presided. The Society has decided to run an open show on Nov. 23 at Aberdare, with the two well-known judges—J. H. Payne, Gloucester, Canaries, and E. J. Davies, Cardiff, the remainder. Other societies kindly note, so as not to clash. There is a members' cup for most points in society shows throughout the season, to be won three times in succession for ownership. The F.F. show, first to count for points.—J. M. Shelby-James, Sec.

SCOTTISH CRESTED C.C.

Annual general meeting at Glasgow, Mar. 18, Mr. Charles Campbell, pres., in the chair. Financial statement for year, which showed a balance of over £8; this being thought fairly satisfactory, the statement was endorsed and passed unanimously. Medals and specials won throughout the year were presented to winners present. Members elected—Messrs. H. R. Hume and John Brown. Subs. are due and new members cordially invited to join. Vote of thanks to chairman concluded meeting.—J. Young, Hon. Sec.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY.

General meeting, Llwynellyn Hotel, Porth, Mar. 23. Chair, Mr. T. James. Decided to leave minutes over until next meeting owing to sec. not being present. Mr. John Wells and Wm. Rees were accepted members and received a hearty welcome. Mr. John Challenger was elected hon. sec., and Mr. A. H. C. Legg, assist. sec. Decided that Mr. Legg should send all reports to CAGE BIRDS in future. Unanimously resolved to buy a shield for competition for members, and several handsome subscriptions were promised. The shield is to be competed for at all three shows—pair show, young bird show and open show, for most points through the year, and to be won twice in succession or three times in all; members competing to pay 2s. a year, thus providing a fund to buy another trophy when the shield is won; the winner each year to receive a gold medal. Members kindly note that headquarters has been changed. Next meeting April 6.—A. H. C. Legg, Assist. Sec.

WALLSEND (Mid-Tyne) C.B.A.

Meeting, Cafe Hall, Mar. 15, Mr. L. Simpson presiding over a good attendance. Show business was gone through, and we nominated a few judges. We have fixed our N.P. show on July 15, and annual show for Nov. 4. Members elected, Mr. P. Smith, Gosforth; Mr. Thompson, South Shields; Mr. Cloud Wallend; Mr. Gray, Byker. Mr. J. Johnston gave a very interesting lecture on colour feeding, and fanciers present listened to it very keenly, and got a few useful hints as to when to start feeding. Questions were asked, and Mr. Johnston answered well. Through shortness of time it was decided to leave over discussion till next meeting, so members please turn up in good numbers, and good time. Election of judges, April 12. New members invited. A very pleasant evening ended with a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Johnston. Geo. Greenwell, Sec.

WELSH (N. Counties) F. & F.A.

Meeting at Llandudno Junction, Mar. 5; Mr. James Arundale, chair. It was reported that the Countess of Dundonald, of Gwyrch Castle, Abergele, had favoured the Association by consenting to become President, whilst several local gentlemen had accepted office as vice-presidents. Applications for membership were considered, and the applicants elected en bloc, the chairman expressing the hope that their example would be speedily followed by other fanciers, now that the membership was open to all. The quotation for prospective site of annual open show not having been received, the matter had to be deferred, as also the date of show, provisionally fixed for 1st Wed. in Nov. Decided to fix open prize-money and entry fees as follows:—Prizes, 25s. 6s., 3s.; fee, 2s.; members, 1s. 9d. Entry fees and prizes for local classes left in abeyance.—G. L. Cragg, Hon. Sec.

PELTON FELL C.B.S.

Meeting Mar. 11, with a good attendance. A discussion arose as to how the section special went. Any member may pool as many birds as he likes, and has to pay 1s. each bird, young birds bred 1916 in Canary and Mule section, and British any age. If 8 birds in a section special goes to best bird in the 4 classes. If 10 or more it would be worked on the sliding scale, and over 5 for second and third, so every man will have to select his best bird which he pools for the 1s. and send them in with his entries, all pools to be paid before May 1. We have nominated our judges to write for terms. Annual show fixed for Nov. 4. Decided that Sec. and Chairman get paid for their work. Sec. 15s. and Chairman 7s. 6d. Four new members, Messrs. Henderson, Hendle, T. Mowbray, and L. Elliott. Next meeting April 15, Pelton Colliery Inn to select judges.—J. Stanger, Sec.

GLASGOW (Derby) O.A.

Annual general meeting, March 17, Grand National Hall, Main St., Gorbals. Mr. J. P. Renwick presided over a good attendance. The financial balance sheet was read and showed a very satisfactory balance. Election of officers: Pres., Mr. J. P. Renwick; vice-pres., Mr. A. McLauchlan; secretary and treasurer, Mr. Jas. Stewart, Junr., 21, Ormonde Park, Muirhead by Glasgow; auditors, Messrs. J. McMahon and L. Scott; committee, Messrs. Phillips Craig, Muir, Livingstone, Vernall, etc. Rules were passed as submitted, with the exception of Rule IV., which now reads: "The funds to be divided into sixteen prizes, viz., Four 1sts, four 2nds, four 3rds, and four 4ths, in the proportion of 4, 3, 2, 1." Agreed to delete N.B. on membership card, which means we will have no meeting in June. Decided to hold annual show 20th Sept., in Grand National Hall, Main St., Gorbals. Judges elected and will be published as soon as acceptances are to hand. Vote of thanks to president and sec. brought meeting to a close. A hearty invitation is extended to all Scotch Fancy exhibitors within the seven miles radius wishing to join. Annual sub. 3s. Any further information from Sec.—Jas. Stewart, Junr.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, Crown Hotel, Hill-st., Mar. 1, Mr. Broadhurst chair and a large number present. New members proposed, Messrs. Waldron, Smith, Jukes, Stevens, Jones, and Matley; elected, Messrs. Woodhouse, Parkes, Clarke, Walls, Westwood, Millward, Layland, Haynes, Cannon, Jones, Baker, and Herbert. This makes 24 new members to commence the year; a grand start, and we can do with more; fanciers wishing to join kindly send your names in by any member, or to the Sec. Messrs. Roe and Norman were elected as judges for open show, Dec. 6, 7. Several Roller members brought birds for the purpose of explaining the tours to the novices of that section. Will all Roller members be present next meeting, April 5, as Mr. Taylor has the rings ready. There will be a lecture by Mr. Weaver, of Wolverhampton on "Seasonable Hints," which will interest all members, and we give a hearty invitation to any fancier who is not a member. Lecture to commence at 8.15. Members please be present at 7.30, so that business can be got over to give Mr. Weaver ample time to explain things; bring young fancier friends, and let us have a crowded meeting.—A. C. Shirley.

PLYMOUTH W.C.O.S.

Meeting, March 21, Oddfellows Hall, Morley St. Mr. W. French presided over a fine attendance. The Sec. read balance sheet, which showed a loss of about £9 on last show; decided not to print same, owing to cost, but each member will be supplied with a written copy. We hope the novice members will muster in force next meeting, to pick up useful hints, and to discuss notice to alter rules re novice cup at N.P. shows. Mr. W. Luscombe tendered his resignation as assist. sec., which was accepted with regret, he having filled the office to the satisfaction of all. J. E. Rowe was elected pro tem, and we hope one of the members will see his way to fill the office. Messrs. W. H. Soper and Holloway elected members.

Table show of British and Mules, Mar. 21, Oddfellows' Hall, Morley St. Entries totalled 70, and a grand lot they were, every one staged in the best of trim. Linnets and Goldies had 15 each, very close in merit. Special best in show went to the winning light Mule, a very nice 4-pointed. The first attempt at a Linnet singing contest was fairly successful; 8 entries faced the judge, and it caused quite a flutter amongst the members. Judges: Singing contest, Mr. E. S. Lugg; show classes, Mr. G. Pridham; their awards were well received.

Linnet singing contest: G. Pridham. Linnet (15): 1, 3, Cheney; 2, Deebie; 4, 5, Lugg; 6, Perrin; 7, Wills. Goldf. (15): 1, sp, 4, Cheney; 2, 6, Hanbly; 3, 5, Deebie; 7, Wills. MANCHESTER AND N.C.O.S.

General meeting, Mar. 20, Deansgate Hotel, Mr. Raynes presided over a good attendance. Decided to hold N.F. show at the Homing Society Club room. Judges elected for Oct. show. Next meeting night Mr. Barker Clegg will give a lecture entitled "The plastic properties of the Cinnamon," so let's have a good attendance. Friends will also be quite welcome.—J. Green, Hon. Sec.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Always Ready).

Meeting, March 22, Hunts Shop, Ocean Road, Mr. J. S. Dixon presided over a good attendance and got through a great amount of business. We have secured as president Mr. Cecil A. Cochrane, M.P. for South Shields Borough; vice-presidents, Mr. T. T. Anderson, who has promised us a handsome present annually to be won by a member; Mr. J. M. Hunt, who has offered us the use of a very large room in King Street to hold our N.F. shows; Messrs. C. S. Cairns, Ald. D. Richardson, Counc. G. E. Evans, H. Robson, J. W. Curry, J. W. Wood, Counc. H. M. Sadler, and we hope by our next meeting to have our list of vice-presidents increased. Agreed that rules drawn up be printed as soon as we get the number of vice-presidents required. Messrs. R. Ridley and Barnes elected trustees. Decided to hold shows as follows: N.F., July 22; annual, Nov. 18. We hope these dates will not interfere with other shows in the North. We have got the promise from some of our members that they will get us the staging, and this we accepted with many thanks. New members elected: Messrs. A. Frazer, H. Whitehead, Nessworthy.—J. W. Watson, Sec.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.A.

General meeting, headquarters, St. Thomas' School, March 7, and second table show Canaries, British, and Muling Pairs. We had a splendid entry of 66. Mr. Beswick judged Brit. and Mr. Schofield Canaries, and gave every satisfaction. Brit. made a grand show both in quantity and quality, and Mr. Beswick had his work cut out to judge them in time for members to look round, and we had to extend the meeting half an hour to give them a chance to see them. General business, including new members elected and nominated, was got through during judging, and finished up with a vote of thanks to the judges. Open and Amat. Yorks Cock: 1, Lane. Yorks Hen: 1, Lane. Yorks Pairs: 1, Lane. A.O.V. Can. Ck.: 1, 3, Garbutt; 2, Lane. Hen: 1, 2, Garbutt. Pairs: 1, 2, Garbutt. Goldf. or Bullf.: 1, 2, Daley; 3, Oldham; 4, Lane; vhc. he, Fairhurst. LONDON AND P.O.S.

A most interesting lecture was given by Mr. Geo. Mortlock at the Regent Hotel, Mar. 16, at the monthly meeting of London and P.O.S. Mr. Crabbe in the chair, and at the conclusion Mr. Mortlock was bombarded with questions from his interested listeners. Unfortunately the lecture had to be curtailed as much as possible owing to the closing difficulties, but what there was of it was most heartily appreciated.

Mr. Mortlock commenced with a few words on the Goldfinch, which, he said, is well-known as a free breeder with Canaries. It is in condition for breeding when the beak is white, and when it utters the "sippet-slap-sip-witty." Birds that have been kept in a room with a fire or other artificial heat come into condition very early, but Mr. Mortlock advised Mule breeders to wait until good weather came along before pairing up. A sure sign that a Finch is well up in condition is when it swaggers its tail upwards and utters the "cheeter-wee-er." It can then be paired up, with good results.

A Mule breeder does better with a house moulting bird, and with a breeding cage in preference to an aviary, but the cage must be as large as possible and plenty of top room is essential if satisfactory results are desired. Some fanciers think they cannot breed good birds from the Chevalier, but there is a much better chance of securing variegated Mules if a Chevalier is used. In any case, Mule breeding requires close attention and patience, and it takes years to produce a really fine clear bird. Success lies largely in giving the Finches every attention previous to the breeding season. The hens that are used for muling are treated the same as Canaries, but they are not so likely to become egg-bound. Some Yorkshire hens produce good Mules, but they are not so good as the Norwich for the purpose.

Mr. Mortlock then turned his attention to the favourite, the Light Mule, which is the ambition of all Mule breeders to produce, but which is so hard to obtain. A Light Mule always has a more "bloomy" appearance than a dark one, and a marked bird very often throws a beautiful Light or Marked Mule. Light Mules are easily discernable in the nest, almost as soon as hatched; the skin, not the down, is light and clear. If the skin is dark the breeder can expect dark Mules. The bird that makes very ready and successful Mules are the Goldfinch, Linnet, Greenfinch, Redpoll and Siskin. Mr. Mortlock then spoke of a Bullfinch hen and Greenfinch cock that bred some lovely Mules, though the cocks were not quite such sweet or fluent songsters as the Canary-Bullfinches, but the cross could be numbered amongst the Hybrids with attractive plumage. The Redpoll makes a good muler, but a really good coloured Canary is necessary; also the Siskin is a ready breeder, but a very mischievous little rascal when the hen is building, and he has to be watched very carefully for he will sometimes pull the nest to pieces. Goldfinches are similar; they too must be watched, especially when the hen is sitting, for if she leaves the nest the Goldie will sometimes turn the whole lot out, eggs and all.

In conclusion (because the time had slipped by so quickly) Mr. Mortlock said that Mules leave the nest quite early and can do for themselves very much sooner than Canaries, so they stand a better chance of growing up. Numerous questions were asked, which Mr. Mortlock answered readily and fully. A vote of thanks was passed, which brought a happy, instructive and interesting evening to a close.—H. H. Huggins, Hon. Sec.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

The Shows.

DARLINGTON C.B.S.

Annual pair show, Mar. 22, George Hotel, Yorkshires turning up particularly well. Norwich were also in good numbers and of good quality. The Mule and Hybrid pairs were a feature of the show and were greatly admired by the many visitors. Mr. T. Wright, York, judged and gave satisfaction. Yorks.: 1, 2, Blackburn; 3, 4, Stainsby. Nor.: 1, 2, Scott; 3, 4, Gale. Mules: 1, Robinson; 2, Harrow; 3, Carter; 4, Raisbeck. Hybrid: 1, Robinson; 2, 3, 4, Hearfield. A.O.V.: Raisbeck.—W. Hearfield, Sec.

GLASGOW (West End) C.B.C.

Meeting and show of British, Co-op. Hall, Mar. 10, Mr. P. Allan presiding over a good attendance. Prize cards and specials for pair show and prize money for annual show were distributed to those present. Member enrolled, Alexander McLean. Specials for British bird show were kindly given by the following gentlemen: G. Henderson (3), G. McGown, P. Allan, H. Hyslop and D. Lunn. Entries did not come quite up to last year's total, but quality was as good. Mr. Edmund Taylor, Shettleston, judged, and gave satisfaction.

For., including Goldfinch: 1, sp. P. Allan. Dark Mule: 1, two sps, 2, P. Allan. Next meeting and lecture by Mr. R. Heggie, Stepps, April 14, at 8; trusting to have a full attendance.—Wm. Proudfoot, Sec. and Treas.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

The most successful and entertaining table show and lecture on British birds ever held by the society was at Headquarters, March 20. Much disappointment was felt at the inability of Mr. Allen Silver to attend as judge and lecturer, but Mr. G. E. Weston kindly consented to officiate—no mean task, considering the entries numbered 55. Members and visitors attended in force, numbering over 50, a testimony to the popularity of Mr. Silver. Staging was completed by the appointed time, thanks to energetic seers and committeemen, and judging was carried on in full view of all. 1st prizes were won as follows:—Greenf. (10); 1st 1st, Kent, Knight; Goldf. (9); Beeching. Linnet (8); Shorter. Bullf. (1); Kent. Bramblefinch (5); Wale. Chaff. (4); Redpoll (6); Yellowhammer (4); Hens (5); A.O.S. (3); all Knight.

Judging completed, Mr. G. E. Weston invited questions and criticisms. Many questions were asked and suitably answered, after which the judge took all classes in rotation and discoursed at length on the merits of each specimen. So engrossed were the audience that the arrival of 11 p.m. came as a shock. Mr. Weston complimented the members upon such an unusually fine display and explained his awarding of two 1sts to the Greenfinch class, the birds being two of the best he had encountered on the bench, a tribute indeed to their owners. Messrs. Marriot's spl. for best bird was shared by these two. A vote of thanks to Mr. Weston concluded an evening which will be remembered by all present.—F. C. Knight, Corres. Sec.

WAXBILLS (Golden-breasted, Orange-cheeked, Grey, and St. Helena). Than this interesting variety, which can be purchased at from 2/6 to 7/6 a pair, there are few more charming foreigners. They can be successfully kept, too, with little difficulty if you will follow the hints given by Wesley T. Page, P.Z.S., in "Nutshell No. 20," 21d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Call at any of our agents and get it for 2d. (list frequently published).

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutshell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, P.Z.S. Get it at once, 21d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

GENT'S AND BOYS' SUITS FREE!

Astounding Easter Offer for a few weeks only to "Cage Birds"
 • Readers! Send only a post card and save pounds.

Now readers, would you like a suit or pair of trousers absolutely free? Perhaps your boy also? A most astounding offer is being made by a well-known London firm! They have discovered a remarkable Holeproof Cloth. You can't tear it! Yet it looks just the same as £3 or £4 suitings. You can't wear it out, no matter how hard you wear it, for if during six months of solid hard grinding work every day of the week (not just Sundays), you wear the smallest hole, another garment will be given free! The firm will send a written guarantee in every parcel. Think, readers, just 15s. 3d. for a man's suit, and only 4s. 9d. for a pair of trousers, or boy's suit 5s. 11d., knickers 2s. 3d., guaranteed for six months' solid grinding wear, and replaced free of charge if hole appears.

The Cloth.

As previously stated, this really marvellous cloth is absolutely untearable—you cannot tear it, no matter how hard you try; but possibly the thought arises that being of such hard-wearing quality, it must resemble in some shape or form the ordinary old-fashioned cord. That is not so. Side by side with the very latest designs in tweeds, and the best of our fancy worsteds, readers without testing the cloth would be unable to say which was holeproof and which was ordinary tweed. It is absolutely identical in appearance, and for considerably less than a sovereign, it is possible to obtain the design and colouring which in ordinary tweeds could not be procured under £3 or £4. The designs are suitable for office and best wear and field or rough wear, so that readers, whether at work or at leisure, need have no hesitation in wearing garments made from this remarkable cloth. The cloth could not be torn by a barbed wire fence, it is quite impossible to tear it, and the manufacturers predict that just as soon as the public learn of its remarkable wearing qualities, ordinary tweeds and serges will become a thing of the past. For your boys it is the very cloth.

Prices Extraordinary.

The prices of garments in this holeproof cloth are truly remarkable—of course, they are cut very low, more or less, to induce the public to test the cloth. It is possible to procure a really well-cut, smartly-finished suit consisting of jacket, vest, and trousers for the absurd sum of 15s. 3d., whilst a pair of trousers guaranteed for six months' solid hard wear could be obtained for merely 4s. 9d., or gent's riding, cycling, or walking breeches for 6s. 3d. Boys' Suits from 5/11, knickers 2/3.

Method in Making.

Readers naturally ask the question, can these goods be well made for the money? Here again is the result of the employment of modern methods and machinery, the outcome of years of experimentation, which have rendered it possible to supply a suit of clothes for 15s. 3d., which our grandfathers could not possibly have obtained at anything like treble the price. As an instance of the labour-saving devices, it must be mentioned that every sewing machine used in the making of these garments is driven by electric power; no work except the actual guidance of the garments through the machine falls on the worker, with the result that double and treble the quantity of garments can be turned out with absolute assurance that every garment is really well made. This is one instance of how the method carried from the beginning to the end of the business has resulted in a better and cheaper article for the public.

The Result.

Readers would do well to investigate this offer at once, before the rush, and the result to themselves will be a considerable saving of money in their tailoring bills, besides being able to wear garments made from a cloth which looks really smart, and yet will wear even better than the ordinary common cords.

Generous Free Samples for Readers.

To induce readers to give this remarkable cloth a trial, the manufacturers offer to send (if readers will send merely a 3d. postcard asking for free samples) a generous supply of cloth cuttings, fashions, and a most remarkable measurement chart, which will enable readers to measure themselves as well as any tailor could measure them. This will be sent absolutely free of charge by return of post. Readers must not delay a day, but should study the advertisement beneath, and send a postcard for the free samples of cloth cuttings. Remember, send now, while prices remain low.

SEASONABLE TIPS FOR BIRDKEEPERS.

Freshly-hatched young require freshly-made egg food.

Make this little and often, three or four times a day at least.

Give fresh air whenever feasible, but avoid draughts.

Prepare now for the mating up of pairs for Mule and Hybrid breeding.

EVERY GARMENT GUARANTEED TO FREE.
 WEAR SIX MONTHS OR REPLACED FREE.

Remarkable Cloth—Won't Tear—Won't Wear Out—Absolutely Holeproof! Your Boy must have a Suit!

We will give any reader a pair of Trousers, Breeches, or complete Suit, free of charge, if he can wear the smallest hole in six months, no matter how hard he wears goods. We have discovered a really remarkable cloth that will not tear or wear out—absolutely holeproof, looks exactly as finest tweeds and serges, made in all the most up-to-date designs and suitable for farm and rough wear or office and best wear. Just to introduce this remarkable cloth to "Cage Birds" readers we offer a pair of well-cut Gent's Trousers for only 4/9; Breeches 6/3, or complete stylish suit for 15/3, BOY'S SUIT for 5/11, Knickers 2/3, and send in parcel a guarantee, plainly stating if the smallest hole appears in six months (no matter how hard you wear goods) we replace the garment absolutely free of charge. Send 4/9 and 4d. postage, together with waist and leg measures, and state colour, for sample pair of Trousers (Breeches 6/7 post free).

A Cornishman in the United States.

Mr. J. G. Rogers, 74, Barrington-street, Rochester, New York, and late of Helston, Cornwall, wishes us to state that he would like to correspond with any fellow fancier in America.

Migrants Arriving.

Reports of the arrival of our spring migrants are now getting frequent. Wheatears and Chiffchaffs have been here for some days, and Sand Martins and Pied Wagtails are reported from Cheshire. The latest arrival is a Swallow, reported in "The Times" of April 7 as having been noted at Christchurch, Hampshire. The ultra early Cuckoo, usually so familiar in the newspapers from Christmas onwards, seems to have given us a rest this year, but notes are coming in showing that the real Cuckoo has now arrived, through the date is still full early.

The Song of the Ring Ousel.

The Ring Ousel has arrived, for it is one of our earliest summer birds, and comes with or even just before the Wheatear, says "F.Z.S." in the "Liverpool Daily Post." At the very beginning of the month a friend of mine saw five on the high grouse moors of the Lancashire-Yorkshire border, and he was told that they had been noticed nearly a week earlier. On these moors the Ousel nests in the grit walls, or, more frequently, in the steep banks cut by the streams which drain the spongy mosses and carve deep cloughs in the hillsides. The voice of the bird lacks the richness of that of its cousin, the Blackbird, but it is wild and free; in harmony with the rugged grey rocks and open heather-clad wastes to which it returns in early spring before the last snowdrifts have melted from the sheltered sides of the walls.

Swallow's 6,000 Miles' Journey.

Referring in "British Birds," April issue, to the Swallow reported in CAGE BIRDS of Mar. 25 as having been recovered in S. Africa, Mr. Witherby says that this is the third Swallow ringed under the "British Birds" scheme which has been reported from S. Africa. The first was ringed as an adult at Cheddle on May 6, 1911, and caught near Utrecht, Natal, Dec. 27, 1912; the second was ringed as a nestling at Skelmorlie, Ayrshire, July 27, 1912, and recovered at Riet Valley, Orange Free State, Mar. 16, 1913.

This third instance, two or three hundred miles further south, and, like the others, is extremely interesting, says Mr. Witherby, and makes it possible to state that in any case some of the Swallows which breed in the British Isles winter normally in the extreme south-east of Africa.

"I cannot possibly answer all the correspondence resulting from my last week's advt. of Norwich in CAGE BIRDS. I have replied to many letters and could have sold many more birds. I hope the day is not far distant when I shall be in full swing again; it is a forced sale owing to the war."—A. E. EBBAGE, (Norwich.)

"Kindly thank all enquirers about my fifteen-penny advertisement in CAGE BIRDS. I have had over 70 letters and postcards, also 37 postal orders up till now. I have sent back all money that arrived too late, and would suggest that all sending P.O.s should also enclose stamps in case they should have to be returned."—G. KEN. NETH (Arbroath).

Twitterings.

The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds reports that protection by-laws have now been secured by all counties except Merionethshire.

Mr. C. Huntley writes that, in addition to 1st in Yorks at the show at the Maesteg C.B.S., he won 4th in Norwich and champion special in Yorks.

We have had forwarded for inspection a sample of the rings advertised by the Sunderland Ring Co. The rings are well finished without rough edges, and the numbers are distinctly embossed. With orders amounting to a shilling a handy pedigree book and cage labels are given free.

As a result of the West Stanley Patriotic F.F. and C.B. Show, writes Mr. R. Hutchinson, sec., we have £35 16s. 3d. to distribute among wounded soldiers, which is very good seeing we only had five weeks from the first meeting to the show. The auditors, Messrs. J. Middletonast and J. Armitage, have certified the accounts. We thank you for your kindness in publishing reports of meetings, etc.

I was very pleased to see such a splendid drawing of my birds on the front page of CAGE BIRDS for April 3, writes Miss A. B. Synth. Since the Holborn Show I have parted with the Jay, but still have the Thrush; he is a most cheerful whistler. The birds' different characters are very clearly marked in the picture. The stillness of the Thrush and the look of inquiry in the Jay's eye are wonderfully expressed; the Jay has evidently seen some insect move. All good wishes to a most helpful paper.

Messrs. J. Howard and Sons, the well-known bird exporters, of London and Norwich, wish to return thanks to the secretaries and members of the bird societies of England for the recommendations they have given to breeders of Canaries to send birds to their depots for sale, thus enabling them to supply their shipping orders as they have come in. They are still offering liberal prices for all kinds of birds to fill orders from abroad.

The opening article in the April number of the "Avicultural Magazine," the journal of the Avicultural Society, is on the Motmot, by Mr. H. D. Ashey, and is illustrated with a beautiful coloured plate. "A French Member" contributes "More Notes on Humming Birds," and among the other articles are "Nesting Habits of the Mistletoe Bird," by S. A. Lawrence and R. T. Littlejohns; "The Feeding of Insectivorous Birds," by P. F. M. Galloway, etc.

A Veteran Crossbill.

In his "Manx Ornithological Notes," in the April issue of "British Birds," Mr. P. G. Raffe mentions a Crossbill, taken near Ramsey in 1901, which lived in captivity for fourteen years, and died on Sept. 3 last year. The bird sang till about a year before its death.

A Yorkshire Fancier's

Narrow Escape.

I hear to-day, writes Mr. E. Thomas (Cardiff), that Pte. J. Dugmore, the well-known Yorkshire exhibitor, is in hospital in France. His dug-out was blown up, and he is very badly bruised and deaf.

Dates of 1916 Bird Shows.

Further shows for which dates have been fixed are: Accrington C.B.S., Oct. 13, 14; Gateshead C.B.S., Dec. 8, 9. Secretaries should make a note of these and other dates as they are published, so that clashing may be avoided as far as possible.

Rooks in London City.

A pair of Rooks are building their nest in Fountain Court, Temple. This is the first time for many years that they have been noted within the Temple boundaries, although close by, in Gray's Inn, there has been a Rookery from time immemorial. The Gray's Inn Rooks have been disturbed this year by the drilling which is continually going on and by the strains of the military bands.

HOLIDAY NOTICE.

Owing to the Easter Holidays, the Editorial Offices of CAGE BIRDS will be closed from Thursday evening, April 20, to Tuesday morning, April 25. Correspondents will greatly oblige by posting their communications to reach us on Thursday, and queries to which an answer is desired in the following issue must be in hand not later than Thursday afternoon.

Proposed Roller Section

for Gateshead C.B.S.

At a meeting of the Gateshead C.B.S. on Mar. 18, writes Mr. M. Curry, sec., a discussion arose as to whether we should add a Roller section to our society, and it was decided to appeal through CAGE BIRDS to Roller fanciers for their views on the same. If we can get their support, our members will be very pleased to meet them. Our next meeting will be May 13th in Lockhart's Cafe, High Street, at 8, when we shall be pleased to see fanciers interested in this variety present. If any fancier cannot attend and will send his views to me, I will lay the same before the members. Mr. Curry's address is 6, Roxburgh Place, Heaton, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Use our Notepaper.

Canaries for the Wounded ... and ... English Canaries for Overseas.

The Scheme in Being: Organiser Appointed.

WE have the pleasure of announcing that we have now appointed a special organiser of our double scheme of providing Canaries for wounded soldiers and of ultimately capturing for our own country the enormous export trade in song Canaries which has hitherto been largely a monopoly of our enemies, the Germans.

The work will be in the hands of Mr. A. G. Filby, whose letter appeared in our issue dated April 8. He will have plenty to do, and we have no doubt he will do it well.

A Committee to be Appointed.

In the meantime, steps have been taken to establish a committee of representative Canary breeders, and letters have been sent out to secretaries of societies inviting the nomination of delegates who will be prepared to serve on this committee.

We are again publishing a selection from the many helpful letters received during the week, and these and all others will receive earnest consideration.

The suggestion of Mr. Hardbottle, the secretary of Leicester C.B.S., that collecting cards be printed and sent to Cage Bird Societies is an excellent one. The cards are now in the hands of the printers, and will be sent to all secretaries as soon as ready. There are nearly 800 cage bird societies in our country, and a little help from each would mean a wonderful total in aid of our wounded heroes.

As will be seen by the letter of Mr. Ousman, the Stoke-on-Trent C.B.S. has anticipated the idea of a collection, and has already made a "whip round." We have no doubt that many other societies have acted similarly, and that their announcements will come along in due course. There are, indeed, few among those who have been compelled to stay at home who are without relations or friends who have been "doing their bit," and there are few who are unable to express in some way their appreciation of the heroism displayed by those who have striven on the field of battle in the cause of justice and civilisation.

It is the most natural thing in the world for a fancier to help a brother fancier, and we are confident that our appeal will meet with the universal support of all those who have been enabled to "carry on" with their hobby through the long months of war.

A Good Idea.

We should like to call especial attention to the letter of Mr. J. Bastock. He offers a pair of birds from his own stock, and tenders for these should be sent to us. The idea is one which will appeal to many, we are sure, and we shall be pleased to give publicity to similar offers from readers who will follow his example.

During the short time which has elapsed since our scheme was first mooted we have received several offers of birds and appliances, and if those who have made the offers will put a price on their gifts we shall be pleased to publish their letters. In this way, as pointed out by Mr. Bastock, birds which might not be the best for any particular case will be turned into money, and the money will serve to purchase such birds as may be desired by the individual applicants, or to meet any case which may be brought to our notice.

Mr. Filby, who is to undertake the organisation of the business part of the scheme, commences his duties next week, and will have something to say in an early issue. We think, therefore, that we shall do well for the present simply to ask our readers to think over the importance of the capturing of the foreign Canary trade, and let us have any fresh ideas that may occur to them. Every suggestion will have very careful consideration.

Who Gives Quickly, Gives Twice.

In the meantime do not forget that the scheme in aid of our wounded heroes is a separate proposition. Don't think about this, but let us have your help in money or in kind. "Many a mickle make a muckle."

As will be seen from the report in our "Club Reports" column of the meeting of the Leeds Roller Club, the association which gave our fund such a good start with the donation of £1 announced in our issue of April 1, the members of the club have endorsed the generous action of the committee, and have agreed to do their best to help forward our undertaking. With such support as this, backed up, as we are sure it will be, by other societies throughout Great Britain and Ireland, the success of our scheme in aid of our wounded and otherwise incapacitated soldiers is assured.

What Bids for These?

SIR,—I note your appeal for birds for wounded soldiers. Now I would suggest that you give a free advert. to any fancier willing to give any birds to a fund started by readers of CAGE BIRDS. It is no use talking about it; let us be up and doing. To start it, I will give a real good yellow 1915 cock and buff hen to match, well worth 30s., to the highest tender, the money to be sent to you for the benefit of your fund, and I will forward the birds to the purchaser upon hearing from you. A special column for such adverts. will, no doubt, meet with success, and I think this will be better than giving the birds direct to applicants, for it would obviate their being furnished with birds of a variety they did not favour, while out of the funds provided you could ask for birds to meet expressed requirements, and you would doubtless be supplied with birds worth more than the money asked for them.

The scheme would, therefore, have a double value. Birds would, in the first place, be given by those who might not give cash, and the cash received by you on their sale would purchase other birds which would not only be worth more than the price asked for them, but would exactly meet the requirements of the wounded soldiers in need of them. If the applicants are members of a society their applications could be made through the secretary, who would, of course, vouch for the bona-fides of each case.

Stoke-on-Trent Gets to Work.

SIR,—Your idea of Canary breeding, as a supplement to the curtailed earnings of disabled soldiers on their return to civil life, is of great interest, and is worthy of the closest attention and support of all in connection with the cage bird fancy, but unless the scheme is carefully and thoroughly organised, and made systematic, the result will be a flooding of local markets, and a consequent slump in prices, which will leave the dealer to garner all the profit, while the breeder, for his season's work and expenditure, will not get change for sixpence.

Given the support it deserves, your scheme will creditably institute a supply, but it must not stop here if a bona-fide attempt is to be made to capture the foreign and Colonial markets, and a system should be arranged whereby the producer shall get the utmost available profit for his labour.

To this end much attention will be necessary to see that the collection or assembling, and also the distribution of the supply, should be done on an equitable basis, and not left to individual profiteering, as the prices now offered are not at all a safe standard, being abnormal, and they will not hold when the supply is increased or when Peace comes, and things generally become more normal.

With regard to the supply, I think the following points should be considered: (1) Type may be negligible, except that the birds should be fairly small, of good colour and voice. (2) Economical methods of feeding, housing, and attention should be adopted, preferably the flight method, and food must be bought at wholesale prices. (3) One cock must answer for a number of hens. (4) Young cocks must be sorted out early for liberal treatment in order to get on song quickly. (5) A course of tuition under a good Schoolmaster is desirable.

This gives us the material ready for disposal, and here arises the question of how best to assemble the birds in convenient batches at centres best adapted for railway consignment to appointed destinations. This, to my mind, requires very careful organisation, and the solution of this problem will be found by amalgamating the best features of the various methods put forward for your consideration, and maturing the scheme on a thoroughly sound basis.

In common with Mr. Last, who writes in your issue of April 8, I am of the opinion that a co-operative scheme would be an advantage, especially for the collection and disposal of the birds, and on this account, without trespassing any further on your space, would refer you to my paper on this subject which you were good enough to publish so far back as Dec. 5, 1914 (your Christmas Number). The principle is there, and the details could be varied on many ways, and still achieve the same object.

I do not know if the Hon. Sec. of our society, Stoke-on-Trent C.B.S., has yet written you on this subject, but it was brought up at our monthly meeting last Monday, and a whip round was made, so you may expect a cash donation when he has "got at" our members who were not present at that meeting. I raise my hat to CAGE BIRDS for its magnificent offer to the paid organiser. Good luck!

Stoke-on-Trent.

E. OUSMAN.

Valued Help Promised from Leicester.

SIR,—At our meeting last Wednesday I placed before our members your scheme for supplying disabled soldiers with Canaries. I have pleasure in stating that we are willing to back you up, both with a subscription (which I hope to forward next week) and help. We are prepared, if you decide to divide the country up into districts, to take charge of this one—subject to your approval, of course.

I should like to add my little suggestions to the number that you already have. Why not work this in conjunction with the Cage Bird League, making us all members of one national association, with a small annual subscription, and, when selling time comes, have the birds gathered together at the different centres, somewhat on the lines of the poultry egg-collecting scheme?

In regard to variety, I do not think it wise to keep to any one in particular, and, with all respect to the Roller fanciers, our own Norwich, Yorkshires, and Borders can hold their own as song birds; the song does not deteriorate to anything like the same extent the training would not be so difficult or elaborate, and they have a much better appearance. Would it be advisable to have collecting cards printed, and sent to different societies for building up funds? Wishing the scheme all success.

J. HARDBOTTLE.

Sec., Leicester C.B.S.

Cheltenham C.B.S. to Discuss the Scheme

SIR,—I am very interested in your scheme to help incapacitated soldiers in augmenting their incomes by Canary breeding, and, incidentally, capture the German trade. That such a scheme is practicable is certain, but what occurs to my mind is, "What is best?"

In talking the matter over with our Chairman, Mr. Madagan, we decided that the subject should be brought up at our next meeting, and the views of the members taken. May I suggest that you ask all societies to discuss it, and the Secretaries report to you the principal points? In this way you would get at the views of people who would never "blossom into print," and a good working scheme could be evolved from the various opinions.

I am rather inclined towards Mr. E. C. Last's suggestion of a limited company, but whatever plan is adopted, it will require a vast amount of organising, and a great deal of work for the committee, or whatever body is appointed.

An Encouraging Press Letter.

SIR,—Congratulations on your scheme for helping wounded soldiers. I think it is a most excellent idea, and while I do not, of course, think that it is going to provide the men with sufficient income to live upon, it is none the less going to augment their meagre allowance from the Army.

I shall have great pleasure in referring to it from time to time in "The Smallholder," and for this reason shall be pleased if you will keep me posted as to events.

Correspondence.

For Soldiers in Hospital.

SIR,—I am writing on behalf of our nation. She says she will be pleased to hand round any papers or books that any readers of CAGE BIRDS would like to send along, also any sort of Coloured Plates to hang up in the ward; they will help to make pictures, besides helping to get more fanciers. There are 80 beds in this house, and nearly all full, so I hope you will do your best on behalf of the staff and my comrades. If any of your readers have any books on any other fancy they might be so kind as to send them along if they do not want them. A singing Canary and cage would be very greatly appreciated by the wounded soldiers in the ward. The Matron thinks your fund a good idea, and wishes it success.

Two Shrapnel Shells—One Skylark.

SIR,—Thinking it may interest readers of CAGE BIRDS, I am writing to tell you of an experience of a Skylark in the trenches, as communicated in a letter from Private Fullerton. He says that a shrapnel shell bursting over the trench brought down a Skylark, which was stunned by the shock. As it recovered it hopped on to the hand of one of the soldiers, who carried it some distance away along the trench. Here he met a sergeant who was about to return home on leave, and a cage was made out of a rum box. The writer says it was more like a cage for a lion than a Skylark, but it served the purpose.

As the sergeant was proceeding down the trench, after being relieved from duty, "quite happy with his souvenir," the Germans started shelling again. A bit of shrapnel smashed the cage to bits, and the Skylark disappeared entirely, no one knowing whether it got away or was killed. The sergeant carrying the cage escaped with a slight cut on the upper lip.

J. NICOLSON.

The Song of the Canary.

SIR,—Mr. W. Napper says we do not know all the secrets of Nature. That is quite true, but it is for the ornithologist, etc., to solve the problems of Nature. What were once secrets are now well-known facts. For instance, it used to be a disputed point as to whether a young Cuckoo, a day or a few days old, could eject eggs, and young birds from the nest, but I got Mr. Peat Millar, of Beith, to take a series of snapshots of a young Cuckoo a few days old, and while still blind, in the act of ejecting a young bird from the nest, and this made a final and permanent settlement of that vexed question. I am surprised at Mr. Napper, being a birdy man, knowing so little about the Cuckoo, as it is the most extraordinary bird, as well as the most interesting that visits this country for the propagation of its species.

Unlike Mr. Napper, I have a vivid recollection of your correspondents engaging in discussions in long-past years. Although Mr. Napper is growing old, I am well aware he is not old enough to have been present at the Creation. What I asked for was his views on how birds learnt, or got their separate songs, etc.

I will give my views on how birds got their separate songs, etc., and leave Mr. Napper to criticise them, if he wishes to. As we are both getting old, I hope we will both be as canny as we can on one another. Bird sing and nest instinctively. How could birds imitate their father's song after they were created when there were no fathers with songs to imitate? If there were only a few pairs created, there would be few separate songs, and few types of nests, whether birds sing and nest instinctively or by imitation. The separate songs of birds in their wild state are almost infallible. Birds build their nests instinctively, and it is an almost infallible habit. How could birds build their first nests by imitation? That goes to the root of the matter. House Sparrows are often reared in House Martins' nests, but, so far as I know, nobody has even seen a House Sparrow's nest similar to that of a House Martin's. And there can be no doubt that birds can reason.

I have not made a study of climbing plants, or why some plants twine from left to right, and others from right to left. I should think they twine in the way they were originally intended to do, but there may be exceptions, as there are in many other things.

How Does the Cuckoo Carry Her Egg?

Sir.—Now that the Cuckoo, about whose abnormally early arrival there seems to have been very little said this year, is about really to come to us for the summer, I have thought it would be of interest to the readers of CAGE BIRDS to know of a long letter which has been written to "The Observer" by Mr. H. S. Davenport. It raises the question whether the hen Cuckoo really carries her egg in her bill when about to impose it upon some unsuspecting Hedge Sparrow or other small insectivorous bird, and suggests a theory, which is new to me at least, that the bird swallows the egg, and regurgitates it when she has found a suitable nest in which to deposit it. I have no doubt that some reader of CAGE BIRDS will be able to answer Mr. Davenport's letter satisfactorily. With some shortening, due to my respect for your space, the letter is as follows:—

It would be interesting, as well as instructive, if someone could come forward and testify to having personally witnessed a Cuckoo in the act of carrying its own egg in its bill, with a view, of course, to depositing the same in the nest of some other bird. Such an economic procedure has been the popular conception for long enough; it has come down through generations, accredited with all manner of reputable hall-marks, and is to all appearances blindly accepted to-day. And amongst the countless historians of British birds who state that it carries its egg in its bill when bent on foisting it on some dupe in the shape of a foster-parent, not a single one, so far as I am aware, has volunteered a scrap of evidence on the point.

Briefly, I take leave to challenge the teaching fostered in books as an accepted and unquestionable fact. Not only has my experience failed to confirm the tradition and belief with which I started bird-nesting half a century and more ago, but it has tended to show that the Cuckoo's crop, not its bill, is where the egg finds a resting-place after it has been laid and until its immediate destiny has been realised.

Some half-dozen summers ago I was lying in ambush, and with powerful field-glasses watched a Cuckoo at such short range that no illusions were possible. It had an apparent malformation of the throat; in other words, a very clearly defined semi-circular bulge in its crop, where its egg most assuredly was. On being flown at and scolded by a Song Thrush, the Cuckoo gave a most feeble "show" its quasi-negative action convincingly proving that it was in no mood for a vigorous scrimmage, lest the egg might come to grief. The bird merely moved its position an inch or two as the Thrush swooped to and fro in its vicinity, and ducked and twisted its head about with an absence of alertness that in other circumstances would hardly have been the case.

What I saw and learned then I have verified several times since under almost equally favourable conditions, and this being so, it seems to me that if, with so many intelligent observers about in these modern days, the bill theory cannot be thoroughly well established as the rule, the sooner it is taught that the cuckoo's throat is used as a means of conveying its egg about until finally got rid of, the better.

There should certainly be opportunity during the weeks that lie immediately ahead for some of our field naturalists and outdoor observers to test the validity of my contention. NATURALIST.

HOW BRITISH BIRDS CHANGE THEIR PLUMAGE.

We are indebted to Mr. H. F. Witherby, the Editor, for permission to extract from an exhaustive article entitled, "THE MOULTS OF THE BRITISH PASSERES, WITH NOTES ON THE SEQUENCE OF THEIR PLUMAGE," which is appearing monthly in the magazine "British Birds," the portions which refer to such birds as are generally kept in cages or aviaries. Readers are referred to the magazine mentioned for the complete account.

SNOW-BUNTING (Plectrophenax nivalis).

ADULTS.—Complete moult in August and September. In March a partial moult confined to the chin, throat, ear-coverts and sides of the head. The new feathers in both sexes are much like the old, but purer white, except those of the ear-coverts which in the male are buff instead of tawny as in winter, and in the female less dark than in winter. Abrasion causes a remarkable change in both sexes, but especially in the male. The wide tawny fringes of the fresh autumn feathers almost completely conceal the upper portions of the feathers of the upper-parts, besides forming a distinct tawny breast-band. In much abraded males in summer the tawny fringes become completely worn off, and the bird's head, nape, and under-parts become pure white and its mantle and back almost uniform black, the rump usually white but sometimes black and white, the wings and tail also become black and white. The female in winter is duller buff, not so bright tawny on the upper-parts as the winter male, and the feathers of the crown, nape and rump have black centres, while the black portion of the feathers of the mantle is not so extensive as in the male. In summer it becomes streaked on the upper-parts, the feathers having large black centres and greyish-white and tawny fringes, the under-parts usually have remains of the tawny fringes especially on the flanks and sides of the breast. The amount of white in the tail and wing-coverts varies greatly individually in both sexes and at all ages. Allowing for this individual variation, the distribution of white in the wings is usually as follows:—

PRIMARIES.—Adult male—white at base often extends beyond primary-coverts, 9th usually with only distal quarter black, 10th with only a black patch at tip of outer web. Females and first winter male—no white beyond primary-coverts, less white on 9th and 10th.

SECONDARIES.—Adult male—pure white or with some small black marks at tips of outer webs. First winter male and adult female—more extensive brownish-black marks on outer webs. First winter female—most of outer webs and distal portions of inner webs brownish-black.

PRIMARY COVERTS.—Adult male—sometimes pure white but usually with black tips. First winter male—either all black or with the bases white flecked with dusky. Females—brownish-black.

GREATER COVERTS.—Adult male—white. First winter male—brownish-black tipped white with sometimes the central feathers dusky-white only flecked with black. Adult female—brownish-black tipped white. First winter female—with smaller white tips.

MEDIAN AND LESSER COVERTS.—Adult male—white. First winter male—median white, lesser black with buffish-white tips or white flecked with black. Females—median and lesser brown-black tipped with white.

JUVENILE.—The upper-parts are dusky-grey streaked with black faintly on the crown, nape and rump, more broadly on the mantle, which is also buffier; under-parts dusky-grey and buffish-white; median coverts greyish-black with white tips; lesser coverts the same with greyish-white fringes. The rest of the feathers of the wing and the tail-feathers as in the first winter.

FIRST WINTER AND SUMMER.—The juvenile body-feathers, lesser and median wing-coverts are moulted in the first autumn, but not the primary-coverts, greater coverts or wing and tail-feathers. In winter the male is often (but not always) of a darker tawny colour on the upper-parts than the adult winter male; the feathers of the nape have small black spots which become more apparent in worn summer plumage; the feathers of the rump always have black centres, but of varying size, so that in summer the rump usually becomes black but is occasionally white with black marks. The first winter and summer female has a darker nape than the adult female, and often has black flecks on the pectoral band, while the secondaries and greater coverts have less white.

CORN-BUNTING (Emberiza c. calandra).

ADULTS.—Complete moult in September and October. No moult in spring, and abrasion has little effect except that the upper-parts become paler and more greyish and the under-parts white. Sexes alike.

JUVENILE.—Much like the adults, but the buff or buffish ground-colour of the upper-parts paler and the black-brown streaks broader and more prominent; the chin and throat are more uniform than in the adult and the wing and tail-feathers and wing-coverts have well-marked margins and tips of buff.

FIRST WINTER.—The juvenile plumage is completely moulted in the first autumn. The birds then become like the adults.

YELLOW BUNTING (Emberiza c. citrinella).

ADULTS.—Complete moult from August to October. No moult in spring, but abrasion has a considerable effect especially in the male, whose crown and throat gradually become more uniform and paler yellow, the upper-parts more strongly streaked and the sides of the breast and flanks brighter chestnut. In the female the crown and throat both in winter and summer have much less yellow and more dark green than in the male, the flanks and breast are not so chestnut, and the belly is paler yellow.

JUVENILE.—Somewhat like adult female, but with no pure yellow on the crown and nape, which are yellowish-brown to pale buff or yellowish-buff streaked black-brown, rump browner and more streaked, under-parts much paler and duller yellow (sometimes greyish only tinged yellow) and the throat, breast and flanks with narrow blackish-brown streaks. The juvenile female appears to be not so yellowish on the crown, and paler on the under-parts than the juvenile male. Some specimens do not bear out these distinctions, which may therefore be due to individual variation; on the other hand, these particular specimens may have been wrongly sexed.

THE COMMON QUAIL AS AN AVIARY BIRD.

By REDWING.

A Story of the successful rearing of a Species which is better known as it appears on toast than in an aviary.

ABOUT three years ago, when I had just completed an aviary for British birds (I mean a garden aviary), and was turning my attention to stocking it in such a way that I should be likely to breed a few of our native birds, and have the satisfaction of observing closely their habits and "modus operandi" during the nesting season, I noticed in the advertisement columns of CAGE BIRDS that there were Quails to be obtained for the modest sum of two shillings a pair.

As I had previously had Californian Quails in my foreign bird aviary, and had persuaded them to breed successfully, I thought that I would like to try if our common Quail would not likewise do me the honour of nesting in my garden. It was like encouraging British labour against the foreigner. So I sent for a pair, and in due time received a box from the railway station marked with the well-known, but alas, not always regarded label, "Live Birds, with Great Care."

Not a Very Promising Outlook.

When I opened the box and had a look at the new arrivals I was rather surprised to see that they were minus the greater part of their plumage, so that at this part of their existence it would have been impossible to give from them a description of how a Quail ought to be feathered. However, they had just enough plumage left on parts of their bodies for me to be able to tell the cock from the hen by a line of dark feathers extending from the base of his lower mandible some way down his throat, which in the hen is a dirty white. The hen also has a breast marked like a Lark's with black splashes, while the cock's is brown with light markings, but this last fact I did not find out till afterwards when their feathers grew.

I turned the pair of them into a fair-sized cage of the box type, and kept them indoors for a time, feeding them on a mixture of dani, wheat, small peas, canary, and millet, and in about three weeks they appeared to have improved so much in their plumage that I thought it would be safe to turn them out of doors into my new aviary, it being then about the beginning of April, and fairly warm.

They had for their companions most of the commoner British Finches, and one or two soft-bills. I had to take the precaution when I let them go of cutting the feathers of one of their wings, as they otherwise would have damaged themselves, not seeming to know that they were not able to fly straight through half-inch mesh wire netting.

Hopeful—But Dumb!

About the beginning of summer I occasionally heard the whistle of the cock, but I saw very little of either of them, as they spent most of their time in tufts of grass and other undergrowth. However, they did not appear to be going to nest, for although the cock seemed to be anxious to do so, and to call to the hen continually, she in no way encouraged him, and as one cannot meddle with the love affairs of birds, I had to wait and hope for the best.

As the summer slipped by, and no eggs were laid, I gradually resigned myself to the thought of no young Quails that year to gladden my eyes, and consoled myself with extensive plans for the future.

When the foliage in the aviary died down at the approach of winter, I replaced it by small bundles of straw in the run, and a few small sticks in the shelter; these sticks the Quails took complete possession of, and spent most of their time crouching under them.

During the winter months they got much tamer, and I saw more of them than ever before, so that with a little patience I was able to observe their mode of feeding more closely. I noticed that they had a great liking for wood-lice, and any other small live food which came in their way, such as spiders, snails, gnats, in fact anything that moved, except perhaps worms, which I never saw them eat, and which somewhat surprised me, as most of the other Callinaceous birds seem to be fond of an early worm. I also noticed that they were fond of feeding at night.

The Promise of Spring.

With the coming of the spring I determined to do all in my power to induce them to nest, and with this object in view I planted hops and tufts of coarse grass about the aviary. I also gave them a liberal allowance of mealworms and gentles when I could get them. Towards the end of May I noticed the hen had taken possession of a tuft of grass in a corner of the aviary, and had scratched a hollow in the earth, into which she scraped a few bits of dry grass. She seemed to consider this was quite sufficient nest to make, for on the second of June I saw that she was sitting, and by watching for a short time I was able to get a sight of the nest when she left it. Then I saw two buff-coloured eggs mottled all over with rich brown.

A Fright which Did Not Materialise.

Things went smoothly after that; the hen laid six more eggs, and sat for three weeks after the last egg was laid, but I got rather a fright one day, for when the hen had been sitting for about a week, a thunder storm came on, and torrents of rain fell, so that I was afraid that the nest might be swamped and the eggs spoiled. They were not, though, for on the 30th I heard chirping, like the noise made by young chicks, and saw the baby Quails, tiny little fluffy balls of down, running about between the grass stalks with as much confidence and ease as if they had done it for years.

I had been supplying live ants' eggs for the last week, and on these the young Quails seemed to live for some time.

Seven of the eight eggs hatched, but three of the youngsters died before they were four days old, from what I did not know, unless it was from cold and wet. The other four, however, grew rapidly, and in about six weeks were almost as large as their parents, with almost the same markings as the hen. I found out afterwards that they were three hens and one cock.

Father a Shirker; Mother a Worker.

It was very pretty to see them feeding with their parents, for although the cock did not pay much attention to them at any time, leaving all the work to the hen, he seemed to have a certain air of proprietorship about him. The hen, on the other hand, was a model mother, scratching with her feet for tit-bits, and showing them to the chicks, and calling them to hide whenever she thought that there was danger, so that anyone visiting the aviary would never have suspected that it contained young Quails unless he had waited for about ten minutes without moving, when the chicks would suddenly appear from a tuft of grass or from under a leaf where they had been hiding.

When the young ones were full grown I got rid of them, and perhaps this is the most disappointing thing in breeding the common Quail. I mean their low market value. If anyone, however, does not mind a bit of trouble without pecuniary recompense, I would strongly advise him to try breeding perhaps one of the least-known, but by no means one of the least interesting of our British birds, the common Quail.

GIRL BUNTING (Emberiza citrinella).

ADULTS.—Complete moult in August and September. In March and April a partial moult takes place, and this is apparently confined to the ear-coverts and a line above and below the eye. Abrasion has not a very great effect, but the colours become more uniform and brighter. While the female is duller on the upper-parts than the male, it differs strikingly in its under-parts, which much resemble those of a first summer Yellow Bunting, but are more prominently streaked and of a paler and more buffish yellow.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

TWO HENS (A. Bradshaw).—It is exceedingly risky to attempt to breed with two hens and one cock in an ordinary double breeding cage without any partition. If you had two particularly agreeable and angelic hens you might succeed, but the chances are vastly in favour of them disagreeing and making a hash of things. You should keep in the partition, with a hen in each compartment, and then introduce the cock to each in turn, until they begin to sit, and then remove him altogether, or when he is away last, put him to the one that will not sit and let him remain with her until the other hen is ready for him for a second brood.

RAPE SAMPLES (F.W.H.).—No. 1 is a nice mild variety of rape sold under various names, such as English rape, etc. It is not summer rape, but is of nice quality and would do to form a change, or as an item in a seed mixture. No. 2 is a very fair quality of summer rape, and is the most suitable for regular use as a part of the staple diet.

QUICK RESULTS (I. I. Samuel).—(1) There is not the slightest reason to doubt the fertility of the eggs because they were produced within seven days of the birds being put together. Let them sit the full time, and you may again be agreeably surprised. (2) It does not at all matter about a strange cock being used for the second round, but when this is contemplated it is best to remove the first cock when the first clutch of eggs commences to sit, leaving the hen to hatch out and rear the young by herself. (3) To be quite sure of avoiding disappointment remove the birds to the other room when the first brood are ready to remove from their parents.

PERSISTENT LOOSENESS (Song Lover).—You should have repeated the full particulars of your management, as I cannot keep all this in mind for each query received. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition give separately half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, teal, broken groats and crushed dry arrowroot biscuit every second day, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake well dusted with carbonate of bismuth and sprinkled with maw seed. In the water add four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of opium and dilute sulphuric acid two days in every three until the droppings become normal. See that all your seeds are sweet and sound. Keep the cage and perches scrupulously clean. The maw seed has nothing whatever to do with causing the trouble.

SWING PERCHES, ETC. (Novice, W. H. S.).—(1) With certain individual types of birds swing perches in breeding cages are certainly detrimental to fertility. Much depends upon the temperament of the birds and their condition, but securely fixed perches are always to be preferred in these circumstances. (2) I cannot tell whether the odour of creosote would be injurious to the birds if kept in it, as I have never indicted this punishment upon them. Possibly not. To help to get rid of it, keep door and windows open day and night for a time—of course, assuming the birds are elsewhere for the time being—and a good current of air going through the place. Close it for an hour each morning and evening and evaporate half a small teacupful of vinegar on a hot plate in it. This will help to clear out the odour, but anyway you will find it fairly lasting.

INJURED TOE (Ruby).—(1) The bird has doubtless strained the tendon of the toe in flying on and off the wires, or about the perches when being caught. Give it rather small and nearly round perches in its cage—about the size of a lead pencil—for a few weeks, and nature will do most to remedy the trouble. You may bathe the foot in warm water for a few minutes each morning, then dry, and gently massage it with a drop of some stimulating liniment, such as Eiliman's, or even a drop of whisky. Repeat this each morning for a week or so. (2) You do not say whether the bird has moulted or not since you had it. If so, it was probably colour fed, and has moulted out a natural tone, in which case you can do nothing until next moulting season is at hand, then, by colour feeding during the moult, you can restore it. Do not give chillies. Give a small supply of green salads and fruits daily, and add 20 drops of chemical food to the water two days in every three for a fortnight. (3) When you see bird beginning to bathe its head in drinker, remove it and offer it the bath, allowing the bath to remain for an hour. Repeat this daily for a time, and you will probably soon find the bird taking to the bath.

VARIED (My Girl).—(1) The samples of seed you sent were very badly packed, and only a few grains of canary reached me. The canary seemed of fair size, and sweet, but no reliable opinion can be given from such a meagre sample. The so-called rape is what is frequently sold as cole, and is a good sample of this seed. As a material portion of the staple diet summer rape is preferable. (2) The advertisement you probably refer to will be found again on page 196, column 3, in our last issue, dated April 8. (3) If the cock has been closely confined in a cabinet it is certainly a good plan to give him a few days in the breeding cage to enable him to "stretch his legs" before introducing the hen. (4) Nothing to complain about in the weather now. Birds may be mated any time, if in the proper condition.

FAT AND LAZY (Yellow Canary).—I am afraid this hen will not be of any use at all for breeding this year. Turn her into the largest flight you have available, and give a staple diet of summer rape only, and supplement this with a liberal allowance of green salads daily. Twice a week give half a teaspoonful only of canary seed, and once a week a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts niger, millet, teal, and sesame. In the water add, every second day for a week, ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, then miss a week, and resume and give it again for another week. If the weather continues favourable for a week or two, you could turn her into the outdoor aviary at once, on or after the first month on the above treatment.

ROLLER WITH LOOSENESS (Finchley).—In addition to the staple diet give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, maw and crushed dry arrowroot biscuit every second day, and on the alternate days give in the water four drops each of dilute sulphuric acid and tincture of opium. Continue this until the droppings have assumed a normal condition.

SITS PUFFED UP (E. B.).—You ought to have said how old the birds are and how you have been treating them. Try the following, and if not better in a fortnight or so, write again and give fuller particulars. Give a staple of three parts canary to one part of summer rape. In addition give separately every second day half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teal, and broken groats, and on the alternate days a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with maw seed. In the water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and after this give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. Give a young leaf of dandelion daily.

INFERTILITY (W. D.).—There can be no doubt that you mated the cock too early, and the unfertile eggs are the natural consequence. The next clutch will probably be different. Give the pair a small teaspoonful of egg food every second day for two or three weeks, and two or three crisp young leaves of dandelion daily.

OUTDOOR SHED (H. H. M.).—(1) Yes, you could keep Yorkshire in cages quite successfully all the year round in the shed you describe. But it would have been an improvement if two or three of the panes of the window shown had been hinged and provided with ratchets to open in very warm weather. (2) If this spell of mild weather continues you might put out the old birds at once to start breeding there. It would be quite safe to put the young out there as they became able to care for themselves. (3) Yes, you could put the old birds out safely in July.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

IN DOUBT (A. T.).—Of your Canary hens for breeding a good-looking Mule, that would sing well, I should prefer the Norwich. Birds produced from this cross would be of better type and colour, and, possibly, better feather than either of the others. The quality of the song would be much a matter of training; the natural song can be greatly improved by hanging the young ones within hearing of a good singer. There is little to choose between the two cock birds for quality of song; personally I prefer the Linnet, but then the young from the Goldfinch usually show a little colour in the face and wings.

ABOUT A THRUSH (N. D. P., Doubtful).—Your Thrush is going on all right. It is quite correct for the bird to sing in a low tone for some time before singing out properly. It is what is called "recording," and most birds commence singing in that manner. Your feeding appears to be quite satisfactory, although I think you would do well to offer him a little fruit, as it comes in season, and any insects you can get hold of. A snail occasionally is much appreciated, but should not be given too frequently, as they are somewhat relaxing. Three mealworms a day would be sufficient. Have you the "Nutshell" on the Thrush?

TWITES FOR THE AVIARY (J. Miller).—There is no reason why your Twites should not be turned in with the other birds; they are not at all quarrelsome. In feeding you will have to watch the Goldies, and see that they get their share of mixed seeds and wild food. A good staple diet would be canary four parts, teal two parts, rape one part. Other mixed seeds, such as hemp, maw, niger, dandelion, gold of pleasure, etc., should be given three days a week. You can make this mixture yourself, or buy some good Finch mixture put up in packets. A few sunflower seeds should be given daily for the benefit of the Goldfinches. Supply all kinds of wild seeds as they come in season.

CHAFFINCH NOT SINGING (Chaffinch Lover).—You omitted to send your name and address. Will you kindly do so? I would advise you to give your chaffinches a little germinated seed. Take a little rape, let it soak in cold water for a night, spread it out in a shallow dish, keep damp and warm, when it will soon sprout. Do the same with some radish seed, and give some to the birds daily. A couple of mealworms each day, or other insects, will assist them. A small feed of light-cracked hemp occasionally will help to bring them along. Do not forget the bath on all suitable occasions.

BULLFINCH GAPIING (S. O. S.).—It appears to me that your treatment of the hen Bullfinch has not been quite satisfactory; possibly the error is in the feeding, or you have kept her in an unsuitable position. You give me no information upon these points. I would advise you to give it six drops of syrup of buckthorn in an ounce of drinking water. Let her have it for six hours, and repeat a couple of days later. Supply her freely with green food, and wild seeds as they come in season, and let her bathe on all suitable occasions. You should get our "Nutshell" booklet on the Bullfinch; it will assist you in your management. Let her have plenty of fresh air, but not in a draughty position.

REARING THRUSHES (Mrs. Moore).—It is not usual to hand-rear young Thrushes at the age you are; they are generally taken when ten or twelve days old, but still it can be done, and, fortunately, the food you are using is on the right lines to succeed. You should add to the egg and biscuit two parts best ants' eggs, and the whole should be made rather sloppy with fresh new milk. Be sure that the food is perfectly sweet. Feed the young as early as you can in the morning. While so young they should have been fed every hour, but by the time you read this every two hours will do. Warmth is almost as essential to success as food, so keep them cosy, with a piece of flannel over them. For further instructions you had better get our "Nutshell" booklet, No. 4, price 2d., post free. (2) You cannot make a mistake in the eggs of the Thrush and Blackbird. The former are quite blue or bluish-green, with a few black spots. The Blackbirds are rather lighter in the ground colour, and are more clouded in marking; some specimens almost covered with greyish-brown speckles. The nest of the Thrush is lined with clay or mud.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY I. PAGE, F.R.S.

TO KEEP WITH PARAKEETS AND LOVEBIRDS ("Stuck fast").—I also am "stuck fast," as your query gives me no details whatever. I take it you have either indoor or outdoor aviaries, or large cages, containing parakeets and Lovebirds, and you will give me size and present occupants of each, or some such data to go upon. I shall be delighted to try and help you. Either, 1, Prince's Street, Cavendish Square, W., is or was the publisher of the book you name, or the Editor of CAGE BIRDS would procure it for you. An answer was sent you by post, but has been returned marked "insufficient address."—(ED.)

AMAZON WITH GROWTH IN BEAK (F. B.).—Such cases are best taken to a vet. at once, as he can make a definite diagnosis, and if the growths are malignant remove them or advise the painless destruction of the bird if necessary. If it is not convenient to you to take it to a vet, then treat the bird's mouth daily with honey and borax, and keep its bowels quite open (not watery loose) with equal parts of Epsom's salt and water as often as may be necessary to secure this. When not giving the magnesia well colour the drinking water with chemical food. You can add biscuits, a little plain cake, and shelled nuts (in variety) to your aviary. Give a little cod-liver oil emulsion daily thickly spread on bread, biscuit or plain cake, whichever the bird takes most freely. You will have to continue the treatment for some time. Shall be pleased to hear how the bird progresses. All Parrots, to a greater or lesser degree, rasp their beaks up and down the cage wires. Of course rubbing an irritated part for relief may aggravate the trouble a little, but it will be very difficult to prevent.

BIRDS AND CRACKED ENAMEL (M. E. K.).—All the loose particles of paint should be scraped away and the cage well washed out. Then, if it needs repainting, put on one coat of enamel thinly, and as soon as this is quite hard the birds can go back again. If you adopt the precautions given above, no deleterious effects should follow keeping the birds in an enamelled metal cage, which, by the way, many fanciers do.

COCKATIELS NOT AGREEING (G. H.).—I have always found Cockatials to agree together when the sexes have been equal, but among all members of the Parrot tribe individualism is very strong, and exceptions such as you name do occasionally occur, not only with Cockatials, but with other species, which generally dwell together in harmony. Cockatials like a roomy nest-box (concrete built up, as ought to have at least three such fixed up, as otherwise they may fight for a favourite site. See to the nesting accommodation, and then give them another trial, when, if fighting still goes on, you must retain the best pair only and part with the other. You could keep Madagascar, Black-faced, and Blue-winged Lovebirds in with the Budgies and Cockatials if you want a little more variety. As you could put in a pair of Canary-winged All-Green Tovi, or Tui Parakeets in with them, not all these four varieties, only one of them, whichever may be obtainable.

AILING JAVA SPARROW (Liver, Walsall).—If this bird does not improve with the advent of warmer weather and unlimited green food, etc., you can put down the trouble to senile decay, which I imagine it to be. The scaly legs are certainly due to old age.

WILL THEY AGREE? (F. B.).—(1) I think all the small Parakeets and Lovebirds you name would agree together in the aviary with your Budgies and Cockatials, providing there is sufficient accommodation without overcrowding. The principal element of doubt being whether the Canary-wings and Tuis would agree together, but if there is plenty of space in your aviary the experiment is not too risky to try. (2) The Quaker Parakeet is bright green, blue flights and mouse grey head, neck and chest. They are more mischievous and interfering than pugnacious, and though I have seen them kept with Budgies, Lovebirds, Rosellas and Ringnecks, and the Quakers successfully rearing young, their inquisitive curiosity as to the nests of the other occupants of the aviary effectually prevents much success among them.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Grey Lice in Canaries (Anxious).—You sent no name with your enquiry, or we would have sent you advice by post, as the case seems a serious one. Your question has been forwarded to our expert, Mr. St. John, whose reply will appear in next week's issue, although you have not conformed with our rules.

Club Reports.

ABERDARE C.B.S.

Meeting, Ap. 4, Mr. Thomas Davies presided. Many specials were promised for the coming show, Nov. 23. Sec. will be pleased to furnish any information to anyone interested. The society wish to draw the attention of other societies to the date of show so as not to clash, and thus assist exhibitors.—J. M. Shelby-James, Sec.

LEYTON C.B.A.

Meeting, Ap. 3, Parish Hall. An egg-food making competition was held. Mr. Bartlett judge. Several members took part, each using a different method of making. The winner of the cash special for best sample of egg food was Mr. Parker. An interesting discussion followed on the merits of biscuits versus bread, the rearing of young birds with and without egg food, and various other knotty points. Vote of thanks to the chair brought an instructive evening to a close.—A. W. Farmer, Asst. Hon. Sec.

LEEDS ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, April 1, Griffin Hotel, Bear Lane, Mr. F. Heaton, chair. The action the committee took in respect to CAGE BIRDS scheme for wounded soldiers was brought before the members. The feeling of the meeting was that we in Leeds shall do our best to make it a success, and the action of the committee was unanimously approved. Messrs. A. Holmes, J. Galligan, M. Newsome and H. Lawson elected members. Intending members please send names and addresses so as to be printed in the new rule books.—H. Best (Sec.), 5 Alma Place.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES.

Meeting, Deansgate Hotel, Ap. 3, Mr. Raynes chair. Mr. H. W. Battye was elected judge for Norwich, and Mr. C. Houlton for British and Borders, at October show. An interesting lecture was given by Mr. Barker Clegg on the Plastic Properties of the Cinnamon, to a fair attendance, and some good discussion followed. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Clegg which brought a well spent evening to a close. Next meeting a lecture by Mr. Cutmore, Liverpool, on the possibilities of Hybrid breeding which will be very interesting.—J. Green, Hon. Sec.

LANCS. AND LIZARD F.A.

Meeting, Volunteer Inn, Oldham, April 1, only a moderate number attending. After the business the annual specials won by members were paid out to winners present. These were paid in cash instead of kind, as it was felt it would be more useful during the present state of affairs. An interesting discussion took place re affairs in the Lancashire section, and it was decided to have an early meeting, at which a lecture on the Lancashire Canary would be given by Mr. Barker Clegg. Vote of thanks to chair concluded the meeting.—John Rukin, Hon. Sec.

WEST LONDON F.A.

Meeting, Headquarters, Windsor Castle, King-st. Hammersmith, April 6, Mr. Turner, chair; nine members and several visitors present. J. Robson gave his promised lecture on the choosing, feeding, and moulting of British birds, breeding of Hybrids, how to feed and moult, also the pairing of Yorks, and Nor. Canaries, their feeding and moulting. He impressed upon fanciers the necessity of using the best of foods, as the cheapest and surest road to success on the bench. At the close Mr. Robson was asked many questions, which he answered in his usual lucid style, and he was accorded a hearty vote of thanks.—H. Chappell, Press Corres.

DUBMIRE (Workmen's Club) C.B.S.

Show of Canaries, Mules and British, for the Benefit of the Fencible Houses Sewing Party for Soldiers, was held Feb. 1, in the Dubmire Workmen's Club Hall, kindly lent by the Committee. We thank the members of the Hutton-le-Hole C.B.S. for their splendid help in the good cause. Messrs. A. J. Nottle and G. Vipond gave their services as judges, and gave every satisfaction. Mrs. V. C. S. W. Corbett, Chilton Moor, opened the show, and was delighted to see so many fine birds staged, 130 in all. We had the great pleasure of handing over £5 6s. 10d. to Mrs. Sharp, of New Lamton, and thank all who helped in the good work for the lads fighting so hard.—Geo. T. Lynn, Sec.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

Meeting Ap. 4, Reindeer Hotel, Rye-lane, Peckham. Mr. Frank Cole chair. Two new members elected. A lecture on the Norwich Plainhead was given by Mr. F. J. Martin, Battersea. There was a good number present, and Mr. Martin had a good reception. His lecture was very brilliant and interesting. Questions were invited after the lecture, and there was plenty of rising for Mr. Martin, who handled the questions admirably, there being a great deal of importance in the questions made. The chairman thanked Mr. Martin for his lecture, and said that although some of the members did not see eye to eye with him, they had heard something valuable. A vote of thanks as accorded Mr. Martin for the trouble he had taken, and for the pleasant evening.—A. G. Cant, Hon. Sec.

SOUTHAMPTON C.B.S.

Meeting, Ap. 4, Mr. W. G. Fellows chair. Schedule passed for British and Foreign table show, May 3. Twelve classes. Birds staged by 7. Judging competition in connection, prize given by Mr. A. H. Baker. The egg food competition fell through, members being too modest to exhibit their skill, but Mr. Chandler brought a sample of his food, which was smelt and tasted, and pronounced good, but no one could guess its composition. Mr. Chandler explained that it was made from a recent recipe in CAGE BIRDS, the component parts being wheatmeal and eggs made into a cake and baked; no doubt it will be tried by others. Mr. Egerton tendered his resignation as member of committee, as he will be shortly serving his country, but it was not accepted, hopes being expressed that his absence will not be prolonged. Mr. Egerton carries with him the good wishes of all the members.—G. J. Slade, Asst. Sec. (Club Reports continued on next page.)

CLUB REPORTS.

BLAYDON-ON-TYNE C.B.S.

Annual meeting, April 1, with a fair turnout of members, who again decided to have a show on the usual date, Nov. 10 and 11. Will local societies please note? They also elected Col. F. R. Simpson, Esq., J.P., as Hon. President; the Vice-Presidents are local gentlemen; Chairman, Mr. G. Dobson; Vice-Chair, Mr. G. Simpson; Treas., R. Havis; Sec., G. Havis; also a strong working committee. New members elected, T. Boyd, G. Robson, Jos. Carr, and W. Bulman.—G. Havis, Hon. Sec.

N.W. GLASGOW C.B.C.

Meeting at Amalgamated Musicians Hall, 44, Napierhall St., Mar. 28, Mr. P. Thom presiding over a good attendance. The principal item was a lecture by Mr. R. Haggie, on the Yorkshire Canary, which was thoroughly enjoyed; the masterly way in which Mr. Haggie tackled his subject showed he had a very practical method of rearing and staging the Yorkshire Canary. Proposed for membership: Messrs. Anderson, Tassie, and Findlay. A vote of thanks to Mr. Haggie and chair brought a very pleasant meeting to a close.—P. Houston, Sec.

GRIMSBY O.S.

Meeting, March 20, Slater's Room, Freeman St., nine members present. Messrs. Walker and Cook were elected members. Decided to buy a silver medal for competitions among Yorkshire birds, most points throughout the year. A Yorkshire class was added for all shows. Mr. Harding promised, on request, to give an exhibition on washing Canaries at next meeting. A table show was held but Mr. C. Smith was the only exhibitor in British gaining 119 points, and Mr. Walker showed one Hybrid pair, gaining seven points. Owing to the war the club is very short of members at present, and fanciers in the district will receive a hearty welcome at the meetings. Classes will be added for any variety of birds. Full particulars can be obtained from any member of the society.—D. C. Thornton, Hon. Sec.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

The dinner at the Arcade was a most enjoyable function, and a great success. The menu was well served, and the musical arrangements being in the hands of Messrs. Sparkes and Pickering, a treat was expected. A capital programme by well known artists was gone through. Nearly a hundred sat down for dinner, and during the evening Mr. Hobson, the sec., spoke on the society's position. He stated that the "old" society was sound financially, and had nothing to fear so long as fanciers played an honest and straight game. The enthusiasm of the members was unbounded, and the officials were of the best. As new members were elected every meeting he hoped this year would exceed expectations. Messrs. J. Woodhouse and Thorpe proposed and seconded a vote of thanks to all friends who had contributed to the success of the evening. Mr. Jones, pres., made a very able chairman.—E. Sisson, Assist. Sec.

GLASGOW AND W. COUNTIES.

Meeting and show, Good Templars' Hall, Ingram St., April 1, Mr. Cross presiding over a good attendance. Balance-sheet read and adopted, showing a substantial credit balance. Sec. was granted a gratuity of £2 for his season's labour. Rules were revised and a few alterations and additions made. New members admitted: H. G. Anderson, McCrystal, H. Ballie. Classification for show 6th May, Green, Lesser Redpoll, Twite, Mealy Redpoll. Messrs. Jas. Dick and J. H. Adam acted and judged show.

Gold: (12) 1, Trotter; 2, 3, Mallon; 4, 6, Pettigrew; 5, McGowan; 7, McJury. Linnet, H.M. (5) 1, Trotter; 2, 4, 5, Pettigrew; 3, Bannerman. Siskin: 1, Mallon; 2, Trotter; 3, 4, 5, Pettigrew. Linnet F.M. (9) 1, Mallon; 2, Trotter; 3, 4, 6, Pettigrew; 5, Robb; 7, Bannerman. Judging competition took place over P.M. Linnet. W. Hamilton won silver medal by giving the judge's selections correctly. Date for first raffle of two season left over till next meeting.—J. H. Adam, Hon. Sec.

QUEEN'S PARK (Glasgow) C.B.S.

Meeting, Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Mar. 20, Mr. R. B. Cairns chair, and a large turnout, amongst whom we were pleased to see with us again Mr. J. R. Steel, after a severe illness which has kept him away for three months. New member admitted, Mr. D. Stewart. Judges for Annual Show, Dec. 2: Nor. and Crest, Wm. Simpson, Airdrie; Yorks. and Bord., G. Hison, Stirling; Mules and Brit., A. W. Watson, Edinburgh. A large amount of club business was arranged.

Table show.—Gold: (6) 1, sp. Haggie; 2, Connolly; 3, McClymont. Bull: (4) 1, McGavin; 2, 3, 5, McClymont. Green: (5) 1, McGavin; 2, McClymont; 3, 5, sp. A. Steel. Linnet (4) 1, A. Steel; 2, McGavin; 3, Jeffrey. Siskin, Etc. (6) 1, 2, McGavin; 3, 4, A. Steel; 5, 6, sp. Connolly. Lesser Redpoll (3) 1, McGavin; 2, A. Steel; 3, McClymont. Hens for Hyb. Breeding (5) 1, 2, sp. McGavin; 3, Hunter; 4, sp. A. Steel. Mr. Mathew Craig, Tolleross, judged, and his remarks on the exhibits were much appreciated. Next meeting April 26, 7.45, Mr. W. Connolly will give a paper on Canary management. Those wishing to become members kindly send names and addresses to the sec., A. K. Hunter, 142, Aitkenshead Rd., Govanhill.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

Meeting, Mar. 29, Shields Cafe, Rigg Market. Mr. T. C. Crawhall chair, with a fair turnout. Mr. Wm. Mathew wins C. R. cup, R. Tindall 2nd, J. H. Leach 3rd, for most points during season for birds wearing closed rings. Mr. T. C. Crawhall won £2 2s. cup, Mr. J. H. Leach 2nd, most points at N.Y. shows. After business we had a very pleasing presentation to make to Mr. R. Tindall, our late sec., for his valuable services to the society. Mr. Crawhall, in making the presentation, said the club owed a great deal to Mr. Tindall, who had been a member almost from the first, and during his term of office the club had progressed in a most satisfactory manner; he hoped the picture with its suitable inscription would always be a reminder of a pleasant time, and it showed in a small way the appreciation of his work by the members. Mr. Tindall thanked the members for their kindness; he had not looked for anything, as what he had done was done for the love of the game, and of the club in particular. He mentioned that when he took over the reins of office he found a balance of a few shillings, and when he gave them up he left a balance of over £7. He wished the club every prosperity. It now had as large a membership as almost any Northern Specialist Club, and he hoped it would go on increasing. New members elected: G. Shields, J. M. Nicholson. Decided to hold next meeting June 15. The first N.Y. show will be held at this meeting. Judge, Mr. F. Laidlow.—Robt. Havis, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN NORWICH P.C.

Annual meeting April 1, Shields Cafe. Mr. J. W. Lawson presided, a fair number present. Members elected, M. Mathewson, Ryher, and J. W. Coulthard, Gateshead. Balance-sheet was read and considered satisfactory, leaving a balance in hand of over £3. Officers for 1916 were all elected except Mr. Curry and Mr. Mathewson, who were elected auditors in place of Messrs. Holden and Pierson. Table shows were considered, and Mr. Holden promised to give a cup for competition at same, and Mr. Curry a medal to cup winner. First table show July 1, two highest birds only to count so we expect members will turn in and help to make the shows a success; judge and classes will be announced later. New members can compete at these shows by letting the sec. know. Spectators for competition at open patronage shows were left over to see how many shows are to be held this season.—F. W. Laidlow, Sec.

MIDLAND ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, March 30, Headquarters, Seven Stars, St. John St., Wolverhampton. Mr. Willows presiding over a good attendance. New members enrolled: H. Powell, H. T. Brookes, W. Tavenor, F. Allen, S. Solomon, J. Giles, D. and W. Whitehouse, E. Owen, C. Whitfield, total new members 25. 1916 rule books I hope to have printed by next meeting. Owing to pressure of business, treasurer resigned. New elected treas., T. Brookes. The following were elected trustees: Messrs. Lawson, Harrison, Brookes. Letter read from Sec. of B.R.C.C. respecting the concessions granted by the B.R.C.C. to all Roller Clubs, unanimously agreed to accept all the suggested conditions, hoping that other Roller Clubs would do the same. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the late treasurer for his past services, and a presentation will be made at next meeting of a gold medal, suitably inscribed. Roller fanciers wishing to join us should apply to J. W. Thomson, Hon. Sec., 9, Gorsebrook Rd., Wolverhampton.

The Shows.

GLASGOW & W. OF SCOTLAND.

Meeting and show, March 28, headquarters, Masonic Halls, 100, W. Regent Street, Mr. F. Taylor, chair. After business we held a very successful show of British. Mr. H. Jamieson judged and gave every satisfaction. He was so well pleased with the hen classes that he himself gave a special prize to the winning Bullie hen.

POPLAR C.B.S.

Pair and Finch Show, All Hallows' Schoolroom, March 9, all previous being beaten both in quality and number; 46 pairs were staged in Canary section alone. The Yorkshire classes were not as well supported as we should have liked, but Norwich were beyond all expectations, the classes being well filled and some splendid pairs put down in the best of trim. After judging Mr. Robson expressed his pleasure at the all-round improvement of the Society, and gave some valuable hints to those present, after which a hearty vote of thanks was accorded him.

VALE OF LEVEN C.B.C.

Annual show, Village School, Alexandria, April 4. There was a large attendance of members and friends, and a good turnout of birds, including many prominent winners at Scottish shows. Sec. intimated that Mr. E. Barron, the popular Sec. of the Scottish Norwich Plainhead Club, had kindly consented to give a paper on the Norwich Canary if club members would alter next meeting to Wednesday instead of Tuesday. Mr. A. Maxwell, of Glasgow, had also promised to be present, as he had some points he desired to put to Mr. Barron, and several other prominent fanciers would be present to take part in the discussion. As this is likely to be the tit-bit of the season it was unanimously agreed to alter date of next meeting to Wed., May 2. Nine new members were admitted, making sixty-five since January. Mr. Matthew Craig, Glasgow, judged, and was much admired for his quick and popular decisions.

WAXBILLS (Golden-breasted, Orange-cheeked, Grey, and St. Helena). Than this interesting quartette, which can be purchased at from 2/6 to 7/6 a pair, there are few more charming foreigners. They can be successfully kept, too, with little difficulty if you will follow the hints given by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutsell No. 20," 2d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Call at any of our agents and get it for 2d. (list frequently published)

THERE is no more lovely seed-eater than the popular Gouldian Finch, which, however, is very difficult to establish. This trouble can be overcome, and the variety kept successfully. But you must follow the hints given in "Nutsell No. 14," from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C., post free for 2d. From agents (see list frequently published).

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin-Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutsell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once. 2d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

MONEY BACK!!!

Common-sense should tell anyone that such is the only system of Genuine Approval. How many offer you this with Parrots? To exchange a bird, perhaps for something not so good, or take more money and exchange nothing better, that is not my idea of approval. With my terms there is no "smart" agreement forms to fill in. You hear the bird for yourself, and if it suits you keep it; if it does not, return it and have your money back in full. I have at the time of writing Parrots that sing parts of songs, whistle tunes, laugh, talk fluently, kiss you, and perfectly tame. I cannot give details of all, but if you will state what you require and about the price prepared to pay, I will give particulars of birds likely to suit you. I have a few youngsters just on the verge of talking, very cheap. NOTE—No Rose Cockatoos or Indian Parakeets sold as Parrots, in fact, I do not keep such.—W. RUDD, The Bird Specialist, Norwich.

TALKING PARROTS

all descriptions, cheapest and best in kingdom, on mouth's trial system at my risk, which I originated, and means if it should die during trial I replace it free of charge. Talking warranty given that if Parrots do not talk to your satisfaction within 12 months I exchange them. No other dealer will do this, although some advertise similar terms and don't carry them out; so be careful. Write at once for my price list and free large book, "Parrot Practice." Contains hundreds of testimonials (more than any other dealer), full names and addresses, proving all best Parrots come from these aviaries. Press opinions and many interesting facts; sent post free. ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

MEDICINES.

EVERY BIRDKEEPER has need of practical hints upon the prevention of diseases and their eradication from cage, aviary, and birdroom. These are to be found in "Nutsell No. 9," post free 2d., from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

"AILING Cage Birds and How to Cure Them," "Nutsell No. 6," an account of the troubles which beset captive birds, with the treatment and list of medicines to restore our pets to health. This will save you much discouragement and money, and costs only 2d. post free.—From "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Or 2d. from agents (list frequently published).

"L'AVEAU"

This preparation of Kribol-ne added to drinking water cures affections of the breathing and digestive organs, and is an excellent tonic, 1/- Address: W. Vale, F.Z.S., Q.M.C. Dispensary Bird Hospital, South Norwood, London.

Post-mortem examination and advice, by return post, 1/6. 60 years' experience.

SPECIAL OFFER

To all customers purchasing one or more bottles of our Medicines we will give absolutely FREE, 4 Valuable Food Recipes: How to Feed Rollers, Linnets, Thrushes and Larks for Song, also small Pamphlet: How to Cure Simple Diseases in Cage Birds.

NOT SINGING. If you have any birds you are relying upon for the breeding season that have gone into Soft Moults, we guarantee you a perfect cure.

DITCHFIELD'S TONIC DROPS are a certain cure for loss of voice, soft moult, slow moult, going light, feather plucking, and inflammation of the bowels.

DITCHFIELD'S FAMOUS REVIVO is absolutely unequalled for giving new life and vigour to the birds, and for producing that smart tight appearance of the plumage so much desired by all fanciers.

These two Medicines given on alternate days will bring any bird into breeding condition.

DITCHFIELD'S SPECIAL LUNG TONIC, the grandest medicines ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. Can be given with absolute confidence to the most weak or delicate birds. All medicines can be given in the drinking water, and the birds take them freely with marvellous results.

SPECIAL NOTICE:

We ask all fanciers who have got any birds that are not quite in the best of condition to give our Medicines a trial at once, as it is often too late when the breeding season is upon us.

All the above remedies are sold in 1/2 and 2/2 bottles; two 1/2 bottles for 1/1, three for 2/8, four for 3/6; two 2/2 bottles for 3/9, three for 5/6, four for 6/9. P.S.—Owing to the scarcity of glass bottles we are unable to get the 8d. size to sell retail, but would like customers to know that the 1/2 bottles are treble size the 8d. bottles. All orders are sent away POST FREE per return from:—

AVADAVATS! Avadavats are very charming little birds, but they need care. The "Nutsell" booklet, "Avadavats," contains full information on the management of these birds. You cannot do better than have a copy by you, and we shall be pleased to forward same upon receipt of 2d. Write: The Publisher, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

WAXBILLS (Golden-breasted, Orange-checked, Grey, and St. Helena). Than this interesting quartette, which can be purchased at from 2/6 to 7/6 a pair, there are few more charming foreigners. They can be successfully kept, too, with little difficulty if you will follow the hints given by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutsell No. 20," 2d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Call at any of our agents and get it for 2d. (list frequently published).

THERE is no more lovely seed-eater than the popular Gouldian Finch, which, however, is very difficult to establish. This trouble can be overcome, and the variety kept successfully. But you must follow the hints given in "Nutsell No. 14," from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C., post free for 2d. From agents (see list frequently published).

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutsell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once. 2d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

AIDS TO SUCCESS.

Our Books and a Common-sense Application of the Advice therein MUST bring you Profit as well as Pleasure.

All the experience of years of careful study by experts is at the disposal of readers.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 1/1.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. M. Kitch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc. Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1, "Hardbills," and Part 2, "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—By G. E. Weston. Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register," a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character. In addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge; (associate editors, J. E. Weston and C. A. House). Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memoranda, with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 3/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL" FOR 1916.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

The Editor is always glad to receive and consider suitable contributions, whether articles, sketches, or photographs. Provided an addressed envelope, sufficiently stamped, accompanies same, every effort will be made to return unaccepted contributions promptly, but he does not in any case hold himself responsible for their safety.

All matter intended for publication must be written or typed on one side of paper only, and must reach us not later than the first post on Tuesday if insertion in the next issue is desired.

Twitterings.

Mr. W. W. Roby writes that he has removed to "The Hollies," Eccleston Park, Prescot, Lancs.

Mr. J. Maddison, New Castle, writes that he is not accepting any judging engagements for the 1916 show season. This announcement may save some secretary the trouble of writing him.

We have received a remittance of sevenpence accompanying a CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL advertisement cut out of last week's issue. The envelope and postal order bear the Buxton post mark, but the sender has omitted to forward his name and address. If he will send these particulars a copy of the ANNUAL will be sent accordingly.

Dates of 1916 Bird Shows.

The original drawings of our front page illustrations, and of most other pictures appearing on our pages, may be purchased by readers for framing. Terms for any picture will be sent on application.

Grimsby Hopeful of a Public Aviary.

Some day, says a writer in the "Grimsby Daily Telegraph," I hope a Park aviary will become an actual fact, for there are numbers of local gentlemen just bursting to help on with a collection of rare and attractive plumage birds.

What a Canary Breeder Thinks of Cage Birds Annual.

CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL is to hand, writes Mr. J. W. Metcalfe, Liverpool, and after a thorough perusal I find it quite comes up to previous standards. Every article is minutely gone into and explained by the various writers. Coming as it does in the thick of the breeding season, every novice should procure an ANNUAL at once; his difficulties will then soon be overcome.

Wake Up, Open Norwich P.C.

Members.

Mr. S. Wilcock, secretary of the Open Norwich Plainhead Club, asks us to call the especial attention of the members to the meeting on April 29 at the Oddfellows' Hall, Thornton Road. Very important business is pending, among which will be the question whether the club shall go on or be wound up. Only four members besides the hon. sec. attended the last meeting—Messrs. Lord, Cowgill, Simonett, and Airtton—and the meeting had to be cancelled.

Hundreds of Yellowhammers Visit Manchester District.

I do not know whether the occurrence is purely local, says "W.C." in the "Manchester Dispatch," but we have had a great number of Yellow Buntings, the Yellowhammer, or Ammer, as we know them. They arrived on Sunday in hundreds, and I noticed them flitting about amongst the gorse on the hillside. A number have stopped here, but the bulk have passed on, and will probably find a summer home in the Yorkshire dales. The Lesser Redpolls are no longer flocking, and are now pairing up. Along the roadway at Siddington several pairs have been seen nesting.

Flocks of Goldfinches at Salonika.

Mr. J. Fenwick, of Shaw, Oldham, kindly sends for inspection a page from "The Balkan News," a newspaper published daily in Salonika. The paper comes from a friend of Mr. Fenwick, Lieut. Maitland, to whom he sends CAGE BIRDS every week. In an article, "Birds in Macedonia," the writer says, among other things, "Jackdaws as tame as fowls seem to replace the Sparrows in the villages, where the spacious well-overhanging eaves gives them shelter. North of the Deve Kran (Camel-back) of the Greeks is a great place for birds—rare Buntings, Goldfinches, Stonechats, Jays, and the ubiquitous Magpies. Goldfinches are a bird feature of this country. Great flocks wheel in the air as one passes, and as they alight the wonderful gold markings are intensified."

In the Courts.

The Catcher Caught.

John Mace, labourer, Buckhurst Hill, was summoned at Epping for catching birds in Epping Forest. Keeper Little said he saw four men near some bushes. Defendant had a caged bird at the foot of a tree, near which was a dummy bird with a lined wire, and he was so intent upon watching a cock Chaffinch about to alight on the wire that he did not observe witness, who seized him. Fined 7s. 6d.

LEEDS.

Open contest for quality Linnit, singing, Clarence Hotel, Skinner Lane. 24 birds sang. 1, A. Binner; 2, H. Wigfield; 3, shared Longbottom and Wigfield. One of our old friends, Mr. T. Chippendale, has been with us again. Judges, T. Summers and C. Ward.—H. Wigfield.

Leeds Quality Linnit Singing Club. Grand contest, Platters' Arms, Skinner Lane, 24 birds; A. Lorrain and N. Solomon judged. 1, Robinson; 2, 4, Chippendale; 3, Dearlove.—F. Turner, Sec.

Linnit contest, April 13, Skinner's Arms, Bunting-torpe, 19 birds, for quality singing. 1, Jarman; 2, 3, shared by Connor and Blackburn. There will be a general meeting to elect fresh sec., as Mr. Clayton has answered the call and joined the colours. Judges, J. Sellers, J. Dalton.

Leeds Linnit and Canary F.A., Albion Hotel, York Road. Open contest for quality Linnit singing, April 15; 30 sang for 5 prizes: 1, Jina Chippendale; 2, Stand; 3, Jarrar; 4, Wigfield; 5, J. Chadwick. Judges, Craue and Naylor. April 16, 31 birds sang: 1, Buttery; 2, 3, shared by J. Chippendale and T. Ineson; 4, 5, T. Ineson. Judges, Hardeastle, Craue, Naylor. April 16, 12 sang: 1, Wood; 2, Thompson. Judges, Hardeastle and Hayes.—W. Naylor, Hon. Sec.

A TIMELY HINT.

Owing to the shortage of paper it is not certain that we may be able to publish a second edition of "CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL" for 1916. See the advt. on page 213, and send for your copy at once, or you may be disappointed.

THE MIGRANTS' BUSY FORTNIGHT.

The London "Observer" of April 9 has an interesting article entitled "The Coming of the Birds," from which we take the following:—

"Given favourable weather, the latter half of April witnesses the great influx of summer birds, most members of the large family of Warblers arriving during that period. The Willow Warbler is invariably a good deal later than the Chiff-Chaff, but earlier than the Wood Warbler, whom he so much resembles. The Greater and the Lesser White-throats, the Garden Warbler, the Sedge and Reed Warblers, and the Blackcap—all these may usually be heard or seen during this next fortnight or so, though one or two of them cannot always be counted on until quite the end of the month or even a little later. The Blackcap, whose rather short though exquisite song has earned for him the title of "Mock Nightingale," is a most welcome addition to our list of singing birds, and although by no means uncommon, not nearly so well known as he should be.

The end of April or early May is marked also by the arrival of several other migrants, some of which are readily recognised, but others frequently overlooked. The Turtle Dove—a much commoner bird in this country than it used to be—is familiar to all; the Corncrake—of very retiring habits and less common than of yore—is more often heard than seen. And after all these are here there yet remain three or four more species which do not care to brave our climate until May is well advanced. The Spotted Flycatcher, and his rarer relative, the Pied Flycatcher, are two of these; the Marsh Warbler—a bird of rather local habits and often unrecognised—is another."

How to Keep British Finches Successfully in Captivity.

By T. Batsford, Stratford-on-Avon.

Some Practical Hints on the Proper Feeding and Caging of Seed-eating British Birds.

IN giving my experience as a keeper of British birds, I will endeavour to describe the best way to keep them in health and condition, at the same time try to win the 10s. prize, hoping that some beginner may benefit by my effort, although I can claim to be only a novice myself, having only been in the "fancy" about two years.

To begin with, I will tell what made me start this fascinating hobby. A friend of mine brought me a young Hawfinch to rear, one that he had caught in the garden, and, neither of us knowing what it was, I had to seek the advice of a fancier. After his inspection of the bird I was put on the right course of feeding, which necessitated my calling at his house, and what a sight there was there for me; it was worth a ten mile march any day.

From that day I decided to be the possessor of some birds myself, and I think I have had about twelve different species through my hands, although my favourites are the British Finches. Thus I have learned the different ways of some of our feathered friends, for before becoming an exhibitor I think everyone should thoroughly understand them. Be sure and get in touch with some good fancier who, if he can see that you are in earnest, will give you all the help and encouragement that he possibly can, and when you are buying birds get him to do the dealing for you.

When on a course of inspection to your friends' aviaries, just keep your eyes open, and always try to improve on your friends' methods, by so doing you know that you have done your best, and when there is an article in CAGE BIRDS giving advice on the keeping of British birds, whether hardbills or softbills, cut it out for future reference as I have done.

My outdoor aviary stock cages are 13 feet long, 12 inches wide, and 16 inches high, and these I can make into any number of compartments up to six by sliding partitions. At one end there is a catch-trap, one foot square, into which, by lifting a sliding door, I can drive whichever bird I wish to catch. In the side of this trap there is another door against which I place the cage I want my bird to go into, draw out the door, and drive the bird in without having to handle him, thus keeping his feathers intact, which is necessary in a show specimen.

This catch trap I use for their water for bathing, thus saving the mess all over the cages. There is a shutter to catch compartment, so that I can make them secure from the cats at night. The front of each part is fitted into a wood frame, thus forming a door which lifts up for cleaning out. I think this makes an ideal cage for moulting Britishers.

In the feeding of my birds I generally get the best seed possible, for I know by experience that it is the cheapest in the end. For the Hawfinch, which is my favourite, I give canary, white sunflower, and beechmast, and occasionally hemp, and when green peas are about I give as many as they want. The various small berries I give as they ripen, especially those of the hawthorn. A few mealworms or maggots may also be given.

For the Greenfinch I use canary, rape, and teazle, with sunflower and linseed added occasionally. To the Goldfinches I give canary and teazle with a little niger, linseed, rape, hemp and maw seed, also as much wild seed as I can get, such as dandelion and thistle, and for green food chickweed and groundsel.

For the Siskin I give canary and niger with a little linseed and teazle. Wild seeds I give as for Goldfinch, with a supply of alder seeds when procurable. To the Chaffinch I give canary, rape, linseed, and white sunflower, as well as a few mealworms, gentles and caterpillars. The Brambling I feed just the same.

The Linnit gets canary, teazle, and rape, with a little linseed, and, as green food, chickweed and groundsel. The Bullfinch I give canary and teazle, with a little linseed, rape, and sunflower added, and for green food I give dandelion, groundsel, and chickweed. As Bullfinches are fond of berries, I give privet and blackberries, when in season, as many as they will eat, for I think this is one of the best methods of colour feeding the Bullfinch. In conclusion, I would advise the beginner not to try to keep more than he can properly cater for. If the job is worth doing, it is worth doing well.

Helping Disabled Soldiers and Capturing the Canary Trade.

WE are pleased to be able to report that the scheme is gaining ground. The appointed organiser has got to work, and is getting things in order for the committee, who will shortly meet and give it a good send off. We have had several encouraging letters and useful suggestions, from which we pick out the following:—Mr. J. S. Baty suggests that local committees should be formed to assist in their districts; another suggestion from a reader at Oldham is to the effect that a company be formed, capital being subscribed in £1 shares, paid up in calls of, say, 2s. each. All these and other suggestions will come before the committee in due course. We hope readers will continue to help us with their suggestions.

We should just like to mention that Mr. Bastock's offer, published last week, of a pair of Norwich at 30s., though made in January before he had cleared his surplus stock, means that the pair will be considerably above the original value.

Mr. Bastock has generously allowed the gift to stand as stated, and we have already received a cash offer of 30s. for the birds. Unless a larger offer is to hand not later than Tuesday morning next, April 25, the birds will be sold to the bidder of the thirty shillings, but they should fetch considerably more than this small sum.

There are many applications for birds coming in from our wounded heroes who have lost limbs or have been injured in the head and are unable to follow regular employment, and we shall be very grateful for further promises of birds, etc. Too many cannot be offered; all will be welcome. We want every bird we can get now, and every young one bred this season that can be spared.

Our scheme is spreading across the water, as will be seen from the letter of a Jersey reader offering birds from the Channel Islands. The letter of M. Rossignol is welcome in a double sense, for our French reader offers personal help as well as giving his own birds. Mr. Bastock's idea has caught on in the poultry world also, as see Mr. Hughes' letter published to-day.

We have received an offer of £1 from a wounded soldier who would like a pair of Norwich, a yellow cock and buff hen, also a double breeder or a pair of Borders; he is willing to pay carriage for same. If any reader can supply these will they please communicate with us, and we will advise our applicant?

Several replies have been received from the secretaries of the London societies who were invited to appoint delegates to serve on the committee of organisation, and when all the societies communicated with have held meetings the replies will doubtless be complete. The committee will then immediately be formed, and our task of organising our supply of Canaries for the benefit of England instead of her enemies will have commenced in earnest.

In our invitation to the secretaries of the London societies to appoint delegates as members of the organising committee we suggested that the committee should meet on Wednesday afternoons. From the replies received, however, we gather that to attend during the afternoon would be inconvenient to business men, and as these are the very ones whose presence would have been most valuable, we have decided to have the meetings in the evening. The first meeting will be held in a room at our offices, 154, Fleet Street, at 8 p.m. on the first Wednesday in May.

We hope to hear from all the secretaries of London societies that they will nominate representatives to sit on the committee, and a cordial invitation is extended to provincial societies also to appoint a delegate if possible to represent them. There is strength in numbers, and we want this committee to be thoroughly representative of bird-keepers throughout our country. It should consist of men who have the interests of the Fancy at heart, and who will devote their efforts to the great task which lies before us not only of capturing for England the trade which has hitherto been almost the sole monopoly of the foreign enemy, but of establishing an industry which will put the English Canary in its proper position as the best in the world.

For Soldiers in Tottenham.

SIR,—If you have any wounded men taking up the hobby of bird-keeping in my neighbourhood, I shall be most pleased to assist them.

A. H. THURLEY.

Tottenham.

SIR,—I am quite willing to sell my Canaries, cages, etc., for the benefit of the wounded soldiers. I have one pair nesting and will take £1 for them as they are in the breeding cage. I have also a cock in full song, and a hen ready to pair (father and daughter) I paid 10s. 6d. for the cock, the hen I bred last year, she has had one nest already this year. I will accept any reasonable offer for them, and the cages, cage fronts, and accessories that I have. They are all Crest-bred Norwich birds, I believe, and belonged partly to my son who has gone to be a soldier. I cannot afford to give them, having already given the money I obtained for the ones I sold last year.

(MRS.) H. WOLFERSTAN.

Plymouth.

To Breeders of Yorkshire Greens: Send Us Your Offers for These.

SIR,—Having read with great interest your scheme to help our wounded soldiers, which I think is a great thing, I will give you a pair of Yorkshire greens, and another pair at the end of the breeding season. I will ask other fanciers over here to help you. Wishing your scheme all success.

Jersey.

J. Le ROSSIGNOL.

What Bids for a Game Bantam?

SIR,—I think the suggestion of Mr. J. Bastock well worth attention. Although I cannot spare any of my birds, I am willing to give a Pile Game Bantam cock, a winner and a good stock bird, for the benefit of the fund, to be sold to the highest bidder (not less than 8s. 6d.), and will dispatch the same upon hearing from you that you have received the money.

W. HUGHES.

How Secretaries Can Help.

SIR,—I think your scheme a very practical idea, and I feel sure people are already grasping it. For instance, I advertised a Roller organ, and it was sold immediately. CAGE BIRDS appeared, and I could have sold another on Saturday morning. This goes to prove that fanciers are already engaged on improving and perfecting the song of British-bred Rollers; but this is practically the beginning; we have the end to attain. What is needed at once is secretaries to band the beginners together, give advice, and explain things generally. The breeding season is upon them, and there are lots of ways to help. One I should suggest is to work co-operatively; say, buy our seed in bulk and share out in proportion; but I say again that what is needed is for secretaries to band the fanciers together. If my services are of any value, I am quite at your disposal to look after the breeders of Burnley and surrounding districts. I don't suppose we shall have much opposition, for nobody will require the German products.

JOHN BROXUP.

The Border Fancy Canary.

The Chairman of the Cheltenham C.B.S., tells how to breed "Wee Gems" to win on the show bench.

A PAPER was read before the Cheltenham Cage Bird Society by the chairman, Mr. J. Madagan, on the Border Fancy. In introducing his subject he said he was very pleased to see his favourite Canary making such rapid strides in the South and West of England. For this thanks were mainly due to the Southern Border Fancy Club. He then gave his idea of what a Border should be.

The first thing, he said, is shape and size. What I like is a bird with a nice round back, and well filled in, running in an almost straight line from the rise over the shoulder to the tail, front or chest nicely rounded, not too heavy, tapering away to the vent. I have found correct backs one of the most difficult things to get. A lot of birds are bred hollow in back, or if not hollow very flat, which makes them long-sided.

The head should be small, round, and neat, a nice small beak, eyes dark and bright, set in the middle of the head, neck not too thick, and proportionate to the head and body. Wings should be compact, and carried close to the body, just meeting at the tips.

The tail should be close, nicely packed and rounded, and well filled in at the root. Many birds fail in this, having spreading tails, or else drop them, getting them almost round the perch; legs medium in length with little or no thigh; feet corresponding.

To get the colour you must breed for it by introducing green blood. In my early days Breeding and Exhibiting the Norwich Plainhead Canary.

By
A. MOORMAN (Corisbrooke).

In this article the author shows how to select birds for pairing, how to feed the young, and how to prepare them for exhibition. The instructions on hand washing should enable anyone to overcome the little difficulties incidental to the process.

A SHORT time ago in CAGE BIRDS I told how I became a successful breeder and exhibitor of the Norwich Canary, so will now give a few particulars of breeding the exhibition Norwich, which may be of interest to beginners.

The exhibition Norwich requires type, size, substance and colour, and should excel in every one of these points. An ideal show bird should have a good bold round head, with a wide entrance, rising nicely from a short beak, a clear round eye, short thick neck, deep and nicely rounded chest, well filled in down the back, wings short and well carried, and just meeting at the tips, tail short and well packed, legs well set back and not too long, just showing a little thigh. The bird should be well out away behind, should stand well across the perch, and have a good jaunty carriage. Its feathers should be of a nice soft, silky texture, with good depth of colour.

How to Select the Breeders.

To produce a bird of this description the breeding stock must be of the finest blood and of good pedigree. The cocks should have large bold heads, and as much size and substance as possible, with good depth of colour, as from the cocks you get size and colour. It does not matter if they do carry a bit of feather, as this can be remedied by pairing with a good feathered hen.

The hens should have good heads, should be true to type, and have short, silky feather of medium size. Some breeders prefer a large hen, but I have always had good results from a medium size hen paired to a good large cock, and they generally feed the young better, which goes a long way towards making a show bird. Always try and keep type and quality on the hen side.

Look over your birds before pairing, and find out the weak points in each one, as what is lacking in the one must be over strong in the other. If, for example, one bird is rather small in head the other must have extra good head properties. Good head properties are one of the principal points and hardest to keep in the Norwich. Never pair two birds together with the same faults.

When pairing, pair a year-old cock to an unfledged or a year-old hen; the young from these will be larger and stronger than from two unfledged birds. Pair a ticked or marked or variegated to a clear. If you have to pair two clears together, be sure there is plenty of green blood running in their veins, or the progeny will be poor in colour.

The Value of Green Food.

It is a very important item always to have plenty of green blood in your stock, as a Norwich is no good on the show bench unless it has plenty of colour, no matter how good in type it may be. The green you require for this purpose is a good bronze green, not the ordinary green bird known as Liverpool Green; these latter are no good as colour producers.

If your stock is inclined to be on the small side, pair two buffs together. The birds required for double buffing are those of medium size, of good type, with nice close-fitting feather of good rich colour, and carrying as little frosting as possible. Young bred in this way will be of good frame and bone, and the double buffing also helps to shorten the wings and tail, and provides the good broad heads and short thick necks so much admired in a Norwich.

Be sure the birds you choose for double buffing have a certain amount of green blood in their veins, or here again you will lose colour. The one fault in double buffing is that all the young will be buffs; I should not advise anyone to overdo it; it should be resorted to only when it is wished to increase the size in the stock, or they have got a bit thin in the neck. Neither should I advise anyone to introduce the Crestbred into the stock to increase size, as birds bred from the Crestbred will carry a tremendous lot of surplus feather with bony heads, and it will take a long time to breed it out again.

A good time to pair your birds is about the last week in March or first week in April, if the weather is at all suitable. Give them plenty of grit and old mortar and outwash bone to help form the shells of their eggs, put in nest pans, and give some building material for them to use. Also give them a little egg food till the eggs are laid.

Take the eggs away as laid until the third, then set the hen the same evening, well dusting the nest with Keating's insect powder. The young will then hatch out all at the same time and will stand a better chance of all getting reared.

If the cock does not interfere with the hen while sitting leave them together, then he will help feed the young. Many nests are saved by the cocks feeding when the hens have refused to do so. If he does worry the hen at all, remove him when setting her, and do not return him till the young are a fortnight old, then he will help feed them.

About the thirteenth day give a little yolk of egg, as if the hen has been sitting close the young will be due about this time. After the third day, add a little biscuit to the yolk of egg, also the white. Give a little sound hemp with the usual canary seed, and a little watercress for green food, increasing as the young get older. Keep an eye on the young, and if any die, remove at once, as they soon become offensive.

When the young are about a fortnight old give a clean nest, well dusting it with insect powder, and when they are beginning to get well feathered see that the hen does not pluck them, as about this time she will want to go to nest again. If she does, remove the young to a nursery cage, and she can feed them through the wires.

At about four weeks old they will begin to peek about for themselves, then give a little egg food, and as soon as you find they clear it all up remove them into a flight and give a little crushed hemp, gradually getting them on to hard seed. Continue to give a little egg food until the moult, and ring all young birds when putting them in the flight and enter their numbers in your pedigree book for future reference.

Keep a look out about this time, for some of them may go a bit thick; if so, give a little milk sop, and this, if taken in time, will ward off inflammation.

When they are from eight to ten weeks old they will commence to shed their feathers, so give a little colour food, making it weak at first and gradually increasing to the full strength required. A good and cheap substitute for egg and biscuit is Spratt's Canary and Cage Bird food; it saves a lot of trouble and expense. When mixing this add boiling water to make a crumbly paste; add a quantity of sweet pepper, a pinch of salt, and some sugar; also add a little linseed meal. You will find they will eat this readily, but it is well to take away the seed boxes for the first part of the day, then you will be sure they all eat some of the colour food. Give the bath regularly, as cold water is a fine conditioner.

Towards the end of the moult, when only the head is left to finish, gradually reduce the strength of colour food, so as to get a good level colour in them, and about the middle of the moult add a few grains of sulphate of iron to the drinking water; this acts as a tonic, and helps to fix the colour.

in the Fancy I made the mistake of pairing clears, and consequently lost colour, but upon introducing a Jonque green cock and cinnamon hen, I quickly improved my stock, and can claim to-day to have some of the best coloured Borders that were out last year.

In selecting breeding pairs don't discard all that are not show birds. I can give you proof of what I mean—the yellow hen I have bred my best birds from for the last two years would not get looked at on the show bench; but paired to my old winning buff the result is a good percentage of winners.

On the other hand, I paired up two show birds, my best buff cock and best buff hen, which I called Cheltenham Lady—which, by the way, was well up in the cards at Swansea show, but was disqualified as being a cock—thinking I should get a stonier or two, but the result was 12 youngsters with not one worth looking at.

In selecting a cock for breeding, be it buff or yellow, use a bird with as good a head as possible, for I find you breed a bigger percentage of good-headed birds from a good-headed cock, even if it is a trifle long or a little coarse, but let your hens be short as possible, not forgetting quality of feather.

In concluding, Mr. Madagan said "There is one thing I feel very proud of, and that is, having brought the S.B.F.C. Challenge Cup to Cheltenham, and it is my earnest hope, that I shall not be the only Cheltenham fancier to win it, and also that other members of our society will be as successful in whatever kind they may be showing in the near future."

The Best Seed-eating British Bird for a Novice

By F. ARCHER (Huddersfield).—

A Well-known Exhibitor Plumps for the Greenfinch.

IN my opinion the best British seed-eating bird for a novice is the Greenfinch. It can be bought for a few coppers, is easily kept, will eat almost anything, and is quite easy to tame. The Greenfinch is very easy to get into condition, and once he is in that condition he generally, with the use of the bath, keeps up his beautiful appearance.

The Greenfinch is also a very handsome bird, and when you have moulted one you will see a vast improvement in your specimen, which, may be, you purchased for a few coppers, say, six or seven months previously. I have moulted them out, and have won prizes with them at our various exhibitions, and I think the Greenfinch will surely please the novice, both from a financial point of view, and for the purpose of gaining experience in bird-keeping.

How to Select a Good Bird.

Purchase a large one, one with as bright a yellow on the wings as it is possible to get.

There are two kinds of Greenfinches, the buff and a yellow, and I have known real good buffs beat the yellows. I myself prefer the yellow, and for exhibition purposes it is well to colour feed it. If I had a buff and wished to exhibit the same, I should certainly show it unfed, for in colour feeding the buff Greenfinch you are liable to get the bird uneven in colour; in other words, blotchy. The yellow Greenfinch takes the colour food very well, and the wing bars are far clearer than in the buff.

Condition is a great point. Once you have moulted the Greenfinch do not forget the bath. If our fanciers would use the bath a little oftener, there would be no need to keep asking how to get the birds in high condition. Condition is simply quality in feather, and the silky appearance (or sheen) as many call it. This all comes about by the use of the bath, and a wee bit of sulphate of iron in the drinking water, say, twice a week, helps greatly to the bird's appearance.

I have found out that sulphate of iron is one of the most useful things in any bird room, and I have many times experienced its value. It is very cheap, and can be bought in penny packets; the reason that it is cheap may be one reason why it is not more fully taken advantage of.

Its Value for Hybrid Breeding.

Some may think it is not much use bothering with the Greenfinch, as at the exhibitions it has mostly to take a back seat in mixed classes. I say the Greenfinch is one of our best British birds, and, if properly kept, can be moulted into a champion. As a Mule breeder the Greenfinch is often used with success, and at our exhibitions we see that some of the best Mules exhibited have been produced by a cross with this bird that can be bought for a few coppers. Then, if this be so, which it is, I claim that the Greenfinch is the best bird for the novice to persevere with.

I also think when the bird is in perfect high condition it is one of the smartest British birds one could wish to see at any exhibition. All that is required in its keeping are a good roomy cage, a good mixed seed, special attention to the bath, not forgetting the sulphate of iron. In season, give green food as near as Nature will supply, and all will go well. The Greenfinch is not much of a songster, but as the breeding season comes in you can see him trying to do his little bit with his wings down, and constantly calling.

The Greenfinch then is well worthy of a trial by the novice, and though he may get the bird for a few coppers, he may, if he moults the same properly, be able to sell it for pounds if he wishes.

The Breeding Season

A Lecture given by Mr. J. W. METCALFE, Liverpool, before the members of the Walton, Everton and District C.B.S., and communicated by Mr. A. C. HUNT, hon. sec.

THE lecture given by Mr. J. W. Metcalfe on the breeding of Canaries was greatly appreciated by all present, and was of a most interesting and instructive nature, for although the subject is a well-worn one, it is always possible that one may receive hints likely to prove useful, and this is especially so in the case of novices. The lecturer laid particular stress upon the following points, and introduced suggestions, based on personal experience, which were quite new to at least some of the hearers.

It was pointed out as of the utmost importance to have the birds in tip-top condition, all accessories ready, cages clean, and sand trays and cage doors working easily, and with as little disturbance to the birds as possible.

Don't Hurry.

The hens should be ready for nesting before an attempt at pairing is thought of, and should have a liberal supply of cuttlefish and a pinch of niger seed about twice a week. It is quite easy to see when the hens are ready, as they begin to call to the cocks, and may be seen carrying a stray feather or any piece of stray material.

It is a mistake to begin pairing too early, especially where the birds are kept in a cold room, as it is quite possible that although they may make a good start, they may, after the second or third egg, throw the game up, to the disgust of their owner.

When it is decided which birds are to be paired, the point arises as to whether they shall be put together right away, or whether the cock is to be kept from the hen by means of a wire slide in a double breeder, or by placing the cock in a show cage and singing in front of the hen, so that they can feed each other through the wires.

The latter method is not to be recommended, as there is a risk of the cock catching a cold from being in the open wire show placing the cock in a show cage and hanging there may be.

Calm Fellows Storm.

It is better to risk putting the birds direct together, and although they may fight for a day or two, they soon settle down, and begin operations in right good earnest. Before putting together, see that their claws are trimmed; this is most important. Also insert the nest pan with the felt lining, and give a small quantity of building material for them to make a start with, allowing a little more each day as the work of nest making progresses.

It may be well to mention here that in applying insect powder to the nest it is always best to place this between the felt lining and the pan, as if it comes into direct contact with the hen's body while sitting it is often the cause of irritation of the skin and vent, which will be found to be quite inflamed in severe cases, and may cause the hen to be restless, or even to discard the nest altogether.

Let Well Alone.

After the birds start nesting, and appear quite settled, the best thing is to let them go their own way without interference. During this time the diet should be good plain canary seed, with a little condition mixture two or three times a week, with egg food on the intermediate days, and a spray of greenfood according to requirements.

After an interval of twelve to fourteen days from time of pairing up the hen may be expected to lay her first egg. Trouble may here present itself in the shape of egg binding, which we are all sure to encounter some time. In this case the hen is found "bunched up," sometimes on the nest, but more often on the bottom of the cage, and evidently in extreme pain.

The best thing in such a case is to get a clean nest pan, and place a felt lining inside it, placing the hen in this, and covering it with a light cloth or handkerchief. Next place this nest pan with the bird in it over a jug of hot water, allowing the steam to penetrate through the holes of the nest pan, and so give relief to the suffering bird.

Novices should be cautioned about removing with their fingers the eggs as they are laid, for this invariably results in breakages. It is far better to use a spoon.

While the hen is sitting the cock can be left with her if agreeable, or otherwise he removed out of sight. If it is intended to run one cock with two hens, allow the cock to remain with the first hen for two or three days after starting to sit, in order to give the hen a good start.

The young should appear on the thirteenth day, but if not, do not disturb the nest until the fifteenth or sixteenth day, as young have been known to hatch even later than that.

How to Test the Eggs.

Naturally one is anxious to know if the eggs are full or not, so they may be examined after about the tenth day of sitting. Full eggs will appear quite dull, the shell having lost its gloss; this is a sure sign of full eggs.

On the thirteenth or fourteenth day, if the eggs do not hatch out, they can be tested by placing in warm water. If young are alive the eggs will move slightly, but if quite still the young are probably dead in shell. The reason for the young being dead in the shell is believed to be on account of the germ being too weak to come to maturity.

The diet for the hens while sitting should consist of plain canary with a little weak eggfood once or twice a week, just to keep them in touch with it, and also a limited supply of greenfood sufficient to keep the system clear. (To be continued.)

Keep on Keeping Canaries.

SIR,—Apropos a recent paragraph going round in the lay Press concerning the "Keep-no-Pets" crusade, it may be useful to point out how misguided and even unpatriotic are the efforts of these anti-waste fanatics, so far as they concern the hobby of keeping and breeding pet Canaries, and a few other singing pets.

As far as the actual saving of money or foodstuffs is concerned, the average Canary consumes in the aggregate a moderate-sized teaspoonful of seeds or foods of other descriptions daily, none of which makes any appreciable effect on foods consumed by man, which are rarely, if ever, used, except as occasional tit-bits or for very young stock.

It should be common knowledge that for a great number of years Canary keeping has been one of the most popular and profitable pastimes among the German masses, and the business of breeding and training of the Roller Canary and piping Bullfinch for export trade with this and other countries has assumed very large proportions.

Of Canaries alone, the chief branch of the trade, not less than 1,000 trained male singers were sent to this country weekly during the season each year, which lasted from October to February or March, and when the cheaper class of birds and hens were included it is doubtful if our import of these birds has been far short of 50,000 annually for many years past.

Now, of late years, the breeding and training of these birds has been taken up and encouraged by a section of British fanciers, with the result that already we have the foundation well laid for producing the material to supply the home market with British bred and trained birds, and thereby capturing what has for long been a most lucrative German monopoly.

It only remains to bring British fanciers to a keen realisation of the fact that now, whilst the German trade is in abeyance, there is an unparalleled opportunity to step in and supply the home demand, and at the same time enjoy a very attractive and interesting hobby and help to keep at home the thousands of golden coins which hitherto have been going yearly to line the pockets of our greatest enemies.

Therefore, to give up the hobby of Canary keeping at this time is not only unwise, but positively unpatriotic, as leaving the business intact for them to resume as soon as the war is over is practically playing into the Germans' hands, besides throwing away a unique chance to capture a German trade, such as may never occur again.

And there are none so poor, none so busy, scarcely any so young, in the rank and file of the British public as to be quite unable to do a bit in this direction.

CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Colour in the Norwich Plainhead.

SIR,—Before dealing with Mr. Allsopp's letter I must ask him not to suggest that I advised green buff should be mated to green buff. Apparently, as my last letter was written 12 weeks ago he has forgotten, or is under the impression your readers will have forgotten, my exact words. [Mr. Allsopp's letter was written in immediate reply to Mr. Cole, but has been held over for want of space.—Editor.] What I said was green to green, and it does not require a vivid imagination to know that when you are trying to obtain colour one of the pair should be a yellow. When he states that green blood plus yellow blood accomplishes more than green blood plus a bit more green blood, he is merely stating the obvious. I should have thought such a statement was unworthy of a self-styled "old campaigner." Is it an admission that green blood is a colour-producer?

I should also like to know where I advised anyone to "fill their rooms with variegated and self greens." What I said was that even the mating of green mark to green marked would sometimes produce clears, and if not then the green marking must be reduced by clear blood. Although he asserts that I advised the former, he admits that I stated the latter. Is not the assertion disproved by the admission?

Mr. Allsopp describes this reduction of green by clear as a "retrograde and ridiculous movement." I should like to know why? Why, too, does he like even less than 20 per cent. green blood in his birds for double yellowing to enable him to produce his "unbeatable colour"? Where also does he get this low percentage of green except by breaking down a green by clear? This is surely an admission that green blood is the fountain for colour. Thank you, Mr. Allsopp, this confirms my experience which I gave to the readers of CAGE BIRDS.

Now, let us see what he has brought out of his stocking. Double yellowing! He would have us believe he does so freely. That it is, in fact, the whole essence of colour production. I should like to know more about it. He tells us he double yellows with an "occasional double buffing to fill in the hollows and round off the bumps." Is not double yellowing therefore "retrograde and ridiculous"? Certainly, if my statement was, his is more so. Breeding yellow to buff is not so likely to produce hollows and bumps. He says also the "double yellowing under the happiest circumstances is paralysing for a while." My word, what advice! Thankee, my friend; I don't want paralysing even for five minutes.

Will he tell us more about this unflighted yellow v.h.c. in a class of 24 with nothing to beat it for colour in the whole section? Was this youngster the exception from others he has bred by double yellowing? Were the others even medium class Norwich? I should also like to know what percentage of double yellow bred buff cocks and hens he mentions. If not, whether it is in consequence of a retrograde and ridiculous movement which has paralysed his stock.

Mr. Allsopp is nothing unless he is original, and I am afraid he has accepted the advice of the wag to "shoot at the moon, perchance he may hit something as the arrow falls." The arrow has brought to his feet a v.h.c. Who knows whether, if he had adopted the rational method, he might not have brought down first and special? Of course, I may be wrong, but unless he can put me right I must still adopt what he calls my "extravagant wastage of green blood." It is cheap extravagance, too.

FRANK COLE.

Novices at the Grand National British Bird Show.

SIR,—As I have had many inquiries, I should be glad if you will allow me to say a novice for the purposes of the above show will mean one who has not won 1st prize in British classes, in open competition at an all-England show. The meaning of "guaranteeing a class" would be: The guarantors would pay the difference, if any, between the prize-money given, viz. 20s. per class, and the entry fees received, nine entries to make full prize money. So a guarantor would lose very little, if any.

The following gentlemen have kindly promised to guarantee: Messrs. Chick, three classes; Mr. Gomersal, three; Mr. Lloyd James, three; Mr. Parlett, three; and Mr. Alf. Wellings, two. Now British exhibitors rally round, and see if we cannot get every class guaranteed. Next week I will send in a list of specials that are promised.

The Origin of Nest Building.

SIR,—I notice that in the correspondence on the Song of the Canary, which has been going on in your columns, the question has crept in of how birds learnt to build nests. An extract, therefore, from an article in "The Teacher's World" entitled Bird Homes, may be of interest. It is as follows:—

"The origin of nest-building is too complicated a subject to discuss here. But it is well to call to mind the reptilian ancestry of birds, and the fact that reptiles place their eggs among such material and in such a position that the sun's heat will hatch them. There we have the crude origin of nest-building, no doubt; and to this day there are foreign birds which place their eggs inside a warm mound and then leave them.

"An inherited instinct guides the bird in this, the most important time of its life. Only this instinct and the skill of its own frail beak stand between it and a host of enemies, not the least of which is the weather. A Rook which chooses a faulty branch, a Tit which favours a nest-hole facing south-west, are both victims of an unsound instinct, and will most likely perish. Such cases are rare; but the fact that the bird population in any district does not alter a great deal shows how numerous are the deaths from ordinary perils. Should we include man among these? Unfortunately, yes; but the evidence points to the conclusion that the bird's instinct is pitted, not against the intelligence of man, but against the hunting craft of cats, rats, mice, stoats, weasels, snakes, squirrels, foxes, Jays, Hawks, Jackdaws, Crows, and others. Again and again one notices that small birds prefer the neighbourhood of man, in nesting time, to the risks of the woods."

Rooks in London City.

SIR.—The presence of the Rooks in the Temple Gardens, noted in CAGE BIRDS of April 15, has been reported in nearly every newspaper in our country, and very many of them have said that the present is the first recorded instance. As the matter has attracted so much attention I have thought that you might like to publish a note sent by a resident in the Temple to the "Manchester Guardian." It is as follows:—

"In a footnote of Master Worsley's book, edited by Mr. Inghen, K.C., he writes: 'Forster (in his life of Goldsmith) says that among Goldsmith's happiest hours were those that he passed at his window looking over into the Temple Gardens. Nor had the benchers thinned the trees in those days, for they were of that race of benchers, loved by Charles Lamb, who refused to pass in their treasurer's account "twenty shillings to the gardener for stuff to poison the Sparrows." So there he sat, with the noisy life of Fleet Street, making country music for himself out of the noise of the old Temple rookery.' It is said that Rooks were introduced into the Temple gardens by Sir Edward Northey (treasurer of Middle Temple, 1701) from Woodcote Green, Epsom, in the reign of Queen Anne."

MANCURIAN.

[Whatever may have been said in other papers, our note said, "This is the first time for many years that they have been noted within the Temple boundaries." As a matter of fact, we believe that there was always a Temple rookery up till about 1840. In Goldsmith's time Rooks nested in the elms, which gave their name to Elm Court, Temple. Three further pairs of Rooks have now joined the original couple, and there are four nests in course of construction.—Editor, CAGE BIRDS.]

Society Formed for East Anglia.

SIR.—As the outcome of the correspondence in CAGE BIRDS, coupled with a little strenuous work in the canvassing line, I am pleased to say an East Anglian Norwich Plainhead Club has now been formed.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of Norwich fanciers, held April 13, after careful consideration of the principles and expenses of a specialist club such as that proposed, decided almost unanimously to support the venture. There is no doubt that something is necessary to be done to bring East Anglia into line with the other parts of the country, and by forming this club we are in a way guaranteeing the success of the open shows in the counties concerned.

The headquarters of the club will be in Norwich, at all events for the first year, and the executive will be elected from all parts of East Anglia. The year is passing on quickly, and fanciers interested, and the secretaries of clubs likely to apply for patronage, would do well to get into touch with Mr. R. Tomlinson, 17, Amphil Street, Norwich, who is appointed hon. sec. I hope that this is the beginning of a new era in the fancy in the part of England which once held pride of place, and dropped into a position of comparative insignificance a few years ago. Thanking you for the assistance you gave by publishing the correspondence.

The Views of One Who Doesn't Like It.
SIR.—The interesting discussions going on in your columns may do much to get fanciers on to the keeping of genuine song birds, for no one with a sense of musical appreciation could class the Canary among these. They are to me merely shrill mechanical warblers about on a level with the toy mechanical warbler which can be obtained in any bird shop for twopence. Fanciers I have met, who indulge in Canary growing, are interested only in the financial results.

In fact, I deprecate and deplore the introduction of the Canary, as its commercial possibilities have killed any prospect of developing musical appreciation among the Fancy, just as general commercialism has killed art and music in this country.

In future, I would have the Canary classed as the bird of commerce. He would indeed be a dull yokel who would have the temerity to class the Canary with say the Nightingale, Blackcap or Song Thrush. I keep all three, and the Blackcap because of incessant song is my favourite. My Blackcap has been trained under a Nightingale and it is truly remarkable how faithful he is to the 'Gale's notes. All who have heard him without seeing him pronounce his song to be that of a very good 'Gale, and although kept in a cold room off the kitchen, he sings summer and winter, except when moulting. The song combats between him and the 'Gale are very interesting, and although the 'Gale tries to drown him with volume he hardly ever succeeds.

He is exceedingly hardy and steady, and refuses to cease singing, no matter how you handle the cage. Mr. Hoxton, from whom I got my Blackcap, and who has a unique method of training his Blackcaps by Nightingales, assured me that some of his Blackcaps excel any Nightingale, and from what I have heard in his birdroom, I agree.

My Song Thrush also is a master performer, and has picked up a great deal of the Blackcap and Nightingale notes. All sing independent of any movement or noise I make around the room. These birds, to my mind, constitute the very soul of British song birds, and it is very trying when some commercial fancier says: "Why don't you keep Canaries?" Oh, dear; oh dear!

F. CARSON.

SIR.—Many will be amused to read the comical and diverting letter in your last issue from our old friend Mr. J. Craig. Evidently advancing age mellow and softens some of us in many ways, and I have noticed the invitation he gives to me to criticise his remarks on the origin of birds and of their songs, but really I can see no useful purpose served in doing anything of the kind—one theory being quite as good as another. As a matter of fact, it would be necessary to take more than the usual grain of salt with either. It would be far better to look for facts rather than opinions; moreover, I have in mind the advice of that quaint old writer John Dryden respecting criticism. He wrote: "Of all the cants which are canted in this canting world, though the cant of hypocrites may be the worst, the cant of criticism is the most tormenting." I should, however, like to repeat that this correspondence has wandered away from the question asked by the Rev. H. A. Soames relating to the songs of our domestic Canaries. In the language of a famous departed Statesman: What I have said, I have said. Thus the subject, so far as I feel concerned, is finished.

Cuckoos are mad, mysterious shirkers and parasites; still, there is, I think, a deal of method in their madness, flying like Hawks to the terror of certain small birds, who no doubt regard the bird as an enemy. But, as before stated, I do not know much about the Cuckoo from actual experience. I have, of course, read a lot of their habits by various writers of repute, from Job to Dr. Bowdler Sharpe, and what I do not know from book knowledge, so far as our present knowledge concerning them goes, is not worth knowing. In this connection, there are some charming observations in the Rev. Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne."

W. NAPPER.

A Society Wanted for Salisbury.

SIR.—I would like to see a little correspondence in CAGE BIRDS about the time for pairing up Canaries. I have been breeding for over 20 years, and I always pair up in the middle of February. My birds are in an outhouse in a back garden close by the railway, with trains passing every ten minutes. At the present time I have 19 young Yorkshires on the sticks, some five weeks old, and hens sitting on second nests. Lots of times I have had young birds in February and have reared every one in an outhouse. I keep my birds in high condition all the year round, always do well every year, and finish breeding before the very hot weather comes. I would like to see a cage bird society started in Salisbury; there are plenty of fanciers, only they want waking up. Anyone interested in forming a cage bird society for Salisbury should kindly send name and address to Mr. Croydon, 110, Castle Street, so that a meeting could be arranged.

E. WILLIAMS.

Greenfinches for Novices.

SIR.—I consider the Greenfinch is by far the best British seed-eating bird for the novice, as it is very easy to keep. The best stock mixture for a Greenfinch is: Canary seed 2 parts, rape 1 part, and teazle 1 part, sunflower half a part. Linseed and hemp should be added occasionally. Privet berries, mountain ash, and the fruit of the hawthorn are also relished, and help to intensify the bird's plumage. Above all, seeding ground-sel is especially valuable, and while this may be offered to the bird he will eat little else. The cage for a Greenfinch should be 20in. by 9in., and about 10in. high. It should be of the box pattern, that is, with only the front wired; all-wired cages are not to be recommended for British birds. It is a matter of great importance to give him plenty of water to bath in.

Club Reports.

EDINBURGH NORWICH & M.B.S.

Meeting, 142, High-st., April 6, Mr. Charlton, chair. Members present booked their pens. Judges elected: Mr. J. Holmes, Edinburgh; Bord. Mr. McAdam, Lasswade; Brit. and Mule, Mr. Dewar, Edinburgh. Letter read from Mr. Farmer, but it was decided that we have nothing to do with same.—A. Bell, Sec.

NORTHERN BORDER F.C.C.

Meeting, April 5, Miller's Cafe, Pink Lane, Newcastle. Mr. W. Smith chair. It had been decided at last meeting to devote this evening to questions, etc., appertaining to the Fancy, but owing to the poor turn out of members this decision was cancelled. Also decided to cancel the Maymeeting.—C. Farrer, Hon. Sec.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY.

General meeting, April 6, Llwynelwyn Hotel, Porth. Mr. T. James presided over an excellent gathering. Secs. reported that they had succeeded in getting Councillor Wm. Evans as president, and Dr. W. Davies and Mr. J. Morgans as vice-presidents; also several others have promised. The Secs. were instructed to write several gentlemen re judging young bird shows, June 8 and July 27. First quarter's contributions now due.—H. C. Legg, Asst. Sec.

PENY-GRAIG C.B.S.

General meeting, April 6, Butchers' Arms, Mr. E. Hughes presided over a good attendance. Show business was gone through, and judges were nominated; names will be published as soon as acceptances are to hand. Mr. Padfield was elected as vice-chairman. Decided to have a class for Rollers. Other societies kindly note our P.F. show has been fixed for first Saturday in July. Members please be present at next meeting, April 20, at 7 sharp, to allow the night workmen sufficient time.—T. L. Evans, Hon. Sec.

SOUTH MOOR C.B.S.

Meeting, April 8, Mr. W. Creswell chair, with a good attendance. Date fixed for young bird show, July 15, Mr. E. Atkinson (Stanley) judge, if open. Date for annual show, Dec. 23. Judges, Mr. H. Seely (Choppington) and Mr. Morrison (Newcastle) if open. Schedule of 24 classes drawn up for young bird show; £2 promised will be added to entrance fees. Decided to hold table show for British next meeting, May 6. Two cash specials for most points and runner-up. Linnet, Goldf. or Bullf., Greenf., Redpoll, A.O.V. Judge, Mr. J. Bainbridge (Craghead).—G. Bates, Sec.

WALLSEND (Mid-Tyne) ASSN.

Meeting Station Hotel, Ap. 12. Mr. J. Johnston presided over a good attendance. Mr. Crawhall, Newcastle, was elected to judge N.F. show, and Mr. Dixon, Bedlington, and Mr. Dixon, Winton, the annual show Nov. 4. New members elected: Rev. C. R. Appleton, Mr. C. Farrer. Members please note to attend next meeting. N.F. show schedule drawn up. One of our members, Mr. Cloud, has suffered a sad loss in the death of his wife, and members sent a vote of sympathy in his bereavement. New members invited. I think we have the strongest society in the north, 105 members.—G. Greenwell, Sec.

READING C.B.S.

Meeting, Palmer Hall, attendance not being quite so large as usual. Members are earnestly requested to attend all meetings, as it is the only way to keep things going. Six names were down to read papers, but only three were present, and Sec. is hoping for the other three, so they can compete for silver medal for the best. Decided to engage judge on terms he had quoted for annual show, and no doubt if some more members are called up in their groups the remainder will do their best to carry on for the good of the fancy and society. Decided to hold P.F. show, July 12. Mr. Yates kindly promised to judge. Classes as last year. New members elected: Messrs. White and A. Atkinson.—O. C. Smith, Sec.

CRYSTAL PALACE AND PENGE.

Meeting, Alexandra Hotel, Penge, April 12. Letter was read from the Editor of CAGE BIRDS asking for representative to be appointed to attend meeting re the Canary trade, but it was impossible on account of the time of day the meetings are proposed to be held, and we hope that the Editor will be able to alter the time. The next item referred to Cage Bird League, and this was postponed till next meeting. Letter read from Bromley fanciers in reference to a joint members' show, and the Secretary is to attend their meeting to discuss matters. A proposal was made by Mr. Lock to apply for the patronage of S.B.F.S. under certain conditions. Then came the lecture by H. Norman on the breeding of high-class stock, which was most instructive to all and does not want any comments. Questions, which were rather heavy, were answered in the lecturer's lucid manner, and the only thing that stopped the meeting was time.—W. D. Fryett, Hon. Sec.

EAST ANGLIAN NORWICH P.C.

A meeting was held at the Festival House, Norwich, Ap. 13, to consider the question of forming a specialist Plainhead Club for East Anglia. Printed notices had been sent out by Mr. J. J. Smith, and resulted in a splendid attendance of leading fanciers in the city. Mr. W. W. Freestone very ably carried out the duties of chairman. He pointed out clearly that something was necessary to be done to revive the waning interest in the fancy in this part of the country, and advised the meeting to carefully consider the facts to be placed before them by the succeeding speakers. Mr. J. J. Smith, in a very lucid way, explained the scheme he had in mind. He pointed out how in other parts of the country specialist clubs had proved an inestimable boon to the societies they had patronised, and had aroused interest and competition of a healthy character. In fact, he had such an excellent case, and made his points so well, that it was apparent what the result of the meeting would be. Mr. R. Tomlinson discussed the scheme from the financial point of view, demonstrating that at a small expense the possible returns to competing members were considerable, and that the societies receiving the patronage of the club would greatly benefit. The discussion was continued by Messrs. Payne, Vines, Dunham, Mitchell, Shearing, etc. Various points raised were replied to by Mr. Smith. The following resolution was carried without dissent: "That this meeting is in favour of forming a Specialist N. Plainhead Club, embracing the Eastern counties, viz., Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, and Lincolnshire." Mr. J. J. Smith was elected chairman of the club, and Mr. R. Tomlinson accepted the position of hon. sec. The meeting adjourned for one month, and the sec. announced that in the meantime he would use every endeavour to get in touch with fanciers in the area proposed to be covered by the club.—R. Tomlinson, hon. sec., 17, Amphil Street, Norwich.

ACCRINGTON C.B.S.

Meeting, Crown Hotel, Ap. 6. Good attendance. Date of open show decided, Oct. 13 and 14. P.F. show, June 24, also picnic arranged for members and wives June 4. Full particulars from Sec. or Treas.—A. Noble, Sec.

WARRINGTON C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, Mar. 30, Mr. Lickersley chair. Several members reported they had paired up. Resolved that a N.F. show be held 1st July. An interesting discussion on members' methods of breeding was started by Mr. J. D. Leigh, Messrs. Knowles, Eekersley, and others taking part, and while no two methods were exactly alike, each individual was quite content with the percentage of young reared by his method. Altogether an instructive evening finished far too soon.—H. Warburton, Hon. Sec.

WELSH NORTHERN COUNTIES.

Meeting Cartmell's Hotel, Ap. 12, Mr. Geo. Hughes (Vice-Pres.) chair, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. J. Arundale. It was reported that the Hippodrome, Llandudno, would not be available for next show, as it was to undergo structural alterations, rendering it unfit for show purposes. Decided to inspect other premises in Llandudno, including the Town Hall, and to apply for the use of the latter on Nov. 1, Nov. 2, and to have a two days' show; cage birds on the second day if it was found that the hall was not large enough to accommodate all sections on the same day. Resolved that half of the net profits be handed over to the Red Cross Society. Three new members elected, including Mr. Ward and Mr. Downing, who were placed on the Committee. Sec. reported that the finances of the Association were now on a satisfactory footing. Draft for Year Book and members' cards being ready, it was decided to have them both printed at once.—G. E. Cragg.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

First meeting of the newly-elected council, April 15. The new President, Mr. W. B. Atkinson, thanked the delegates for the honourable position in which they had placed him, and hoped to uphold the traditions of his predecessors. He told of an incident in his career at the time of the Boer War, when he was out in South Africa, of reading in "Cage Birds" about the Yorkshire Union and cage bird breeding. He determined when he got home to start Canary breeding, but little thought that he would one day be returned President of the the Council. Committee to revise the Union rules. Elected: Messrs. H. H. Towers, F. Hammond, P. Mason, D. W. Kabery, R. Garnett, H. J. Chittenden, G. R. Rusiworth, M. Broadley, A. Gledhill, F. P. Terry, J. G. Anderson, and D. Horsfield. The members' fees for the coming year were put down at 8d. A recommendation was made to the committee that some scheme be formulated in the new rules to provide a trophy. Result of balloting for judges: City of Bradford, H. W. Walsh; Bradford West, F. Self; Tong, H. W. Battye; Manningham, W. Mundill; Huddersfield, J. W. Metcalfe; Laisterdyke, P. Mason; Windhill, E. Clegg; Gt. Horton, R. Garnett; Bradford East, H. J. Chittenden; Halifax, A. Radley; Shipley, T. Bennett; Skelmanthorpe, W. H. Shackleton.

GATESHEAD C.B.S.

Annual general meeting Mar. 18; Mr. A. Holden presided over a good attendance. Amongst those present was Mr. Houghton, Gloucester, the well-known breeder and exhibitor of Norwich Plainheads, who was given a hearty welcome. The balance-sheet showed an income of £83 9s. 3d., expenditure £67 3s. 6d., balance £16 5s. 9d. Decided not to get balance-sheets printed, but any member to be allowed to look over the books if he desires to do so. Election of officials for 1916: Pres., Ald. Gillies, J.P.; vice-pres., re-elected, with the addition of Mr. F. F. Hawkins and Messrs. Heaps Bros.; chairman, Mr. A. Holden; vice-chair, Rev. C. R. Appleton; sec. and treas., W. Curry; committee, Messrs. J. Mackenzie, J. Maddison, H. Wellsbury, J. Davidson, J. W. Lawson, R. Tindle, F. W. Laidlow, J. Liddle, W. Mather, J. Peirson, E. B. Hooper, J. Moor, J. McGuire, J. W. Reed, R. Smith, J. Rowan, J. Cromarty, S. Lindsay. Decided that the sec. be given an honorarium of £3 for his services. Rules were passed as the previous year. Show date fixed Dec. 8 and 9. Societies please note that these dates are of long standing in connection with the society. Decided to hold next meeting May 13 with a table show of British. Mr. J. Maddison to be asked to judge. Classes: Linnet, Goldf. or Bullf., Greenf., A.O.V., Mules or Hyh. Rev. C. R. Appleton has promised to give 2s. 6d. for most points. A discussion arose on whether we should add a Roller Canary section to the society. Decided if we got the support of these fanciers to add same. Members elected: Mr. Conit hard, Mr. J. Wright. A hearty welcome to any fancier who would like to join the "Palace of the North." Entrance fee, 1s. Subs., 2s. 6d. For further particulars apply to sec., W. Curry, 6, Roxburgh place, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Queries Answered

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must be written on separate sheets of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions or advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—Queries received during any week, up to the first post on Saturday morning, will be answered in the issue bearing date of Saturday in the following week.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence.
- (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Mrs. B. T., Miss E. V., R. C. W.—Replied to by post.

INSECTS, ETC. (J. E. H.).—(1) I am afraid you misunderstood my remark that the insects were due to carelessness. It is quite possible to be most scrupulous in keeping the sand tray clean, and also the food and water vessels and bath, and yet fail in that particular detail which is the main point in keeping red mites at bay. It is essential to exercise constant vigilance over the ends of all perches, joints of doors, and any likely places, however small and hidden, which may form possible harbours for the pest, and frequently touch these places with some insecticide. Without this attention the most cleanly kept cage may become a refuge for mites. (2) You ought to have said what the last treatment I advised was, as I cannot recall these details. Anyway, you cannot go far wrong if you keep the bird in a comfortable temperature, and give every second day for a week half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed. On the alternate days add to the water 20 drops of a mixture made by dissolving half a drachm of ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine in an ounce of sherry, and then adding a teaspoonful of glycerine. Stop the other treatment whilst giving this.

SQUEAKING NOISE (W. P. C.).—See that the bird is not exposed to heated air or fumes from the gas when lit, and that it is free from cold draughts. It is always best to hang the cage below the level of the gas-burner if possible. Then every second day for a fortnight give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days add to the water five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipocachuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre.

MATING ROLLER COCK (Liverpool).—(1) It is advisable to mate a Roller cock with a Yorks. hen only when you wish to breed larger and better looking young than pure Rollers, and do not mind some deterioration in quality of song. The young would, of course, be crossbreds. (2) In Roller contests both quality and variety of song is taken into consideration and given its proper value, though quality is the most important item. The letters you give signify, as follows: H.R., hollow roll; H.B., hollow bell; bass, bass; roll, snatcher or schockel; P., flutes; W.R., water roll; W.T., whistling tour; W.G., water gluck; B.T., bell tour; R.R., bass roll; and G.M., general effect. These are the names of the tours, except the last one, which explains itself. A perfect tour is valued at a certain number of points, and the figures given after the initials are the number of points the bird gains for each tour it sings.

THE REASON WHY (Tom Wade).—It is not possible to say without close personal knowledge of the case why the hen deserted the eggs after seven days, except that the broodiness had evidently left her. You do not say whether the cock was with her or not. If so, try removing him when she commences to sit next time, and leave her to hatch out and rear the young by herself, and vice versa. She will doubtless settle down better with the next brood. The deserted eggs are quite useless now.

GREY LICE (Anxious).—It should not have been at all a difficult matter to prevent the grey lice spreading all through your stock. Be very careful not to use appliances on cages indiscriminately, but keep each set strictly limited to its use on one cage. As you have so many birds, your best plan should consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Battye's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/1); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/1); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Norman's "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3d.); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 10 "The Roller," No. 23 "The Border Fancy," No. 24 "Green Canaries." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. is to offer all a bath daily for a time, in each pint of water in which you have dissolved a small teaspoonful of sulphureted potash, and twice a week paint over the ends of all perches, joints of doors, and corners of cages with a solution of an ounce of camphor in half a pint of methylated spirit. This can be done whilst the cages are occupied. It will spoil the varnish, if any, on cage fronts, but that is unavoidable. Dust all nests freely with Keating's, and burn at once as soon as done with, and burn all loose nesting-material that remains in any cage after the nest is built. There is not the slightest necessity to destroy all the birds.

STARTING THE HOBBY (X. C. Mayes).—(1) It is quite possible to breed with one pair, or even two or more, of Canaries when one is at business during the day. Lots of breeders are similarly placed. (2) With proper and judicious management the hobby can be made "to pay." (3) An attic, especially if not extremely susceptible to weather changes, can be made into a very suitable birdroom. Thousands of high-class Canaries are bred in such places. You should get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our Manager would send you for 7d., post free, as it will tell you much about the possibilities of the hobby and prevent you making many mistakes.

ROLLER TROUBLES (W. T. P.).—(1) I'm afraid this bird will never be any more good. The swelling is doubtless a tumorous growth, which might be excised by a veterinary if the bird is worth it, which I doubt, but I would not advise any amateurish interference. You might try touching it with a small feather dipped in tincture of iodine twice a week for a month. To correct the looseness keep cage and perches and all food and water vessels scrupulously clean, and in addition to the usual seed diet give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, maw and crushed arrowroot biscuit, dry, every second day, and on the alternate days add to the water four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of opium, and dilute sulphuric acid. When the droppings become normal stop this, and give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. (2) The hen evidently refused to feed the young, and as you seem to have had the cock with her try taking him away when she commences to sit the next brood, and leave her to hatch out and rear the young by herself. As the season will be more appropriate it is quite likely that the next brood will be more of a success. To be prepared for any emergency, however, you would do well to provide yourself with a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our Manager will send you for 7d., post free.

REFUSING TO SIT (Novice, Oldham).—One cannot reason with a hen which refuses to sit after completing her clutch of eggs, and it is not always possible to account for the idiosyncrasy. The only way out of the difficulty is to give the eggs to another hen or hens that may be about commencing to sit. It is just possible the eggs may be kept good for ten days or so until the next hen is ready to sit. Keep them in a small box, buried in bran, and keep it in a cool dry place, and give the box a half turn every morning and evening. It is quite likely the hen may herself behave better with the next clutch.

Miss E. B.—Replied to by post.

OVERGROWN MANDIBLE (H. A. H.).—Get a small pair of nail or embroidery scissors, sharp, and catch the bird and carefully nip off the overgrown portion of the mandible, reducing it to its proper length, but be careful not to go too near the "quick." If you look carefully at the mandible you will see a thin pink streak running a little below the edge of the mandible all round. This indicates how far the "quick" extends. Be careful not to cut quite as low as this line, or you will make the bird bleed. If you should accidentally get a little too near break the meat with a match stick dipped in Friar's Balsam. Keep a morsel of cuttlefish stuck in the wires, or a cube of lump sugar for the bird to peck at, which will help to prevent the beak again becoming overgrown.

BREEDING QUERIES (Novice, A. H. H.).—(1) The type of breeding cage you mention is so much out-of-date that it was purposely unmentioned in the handbook you have. It has many objectionable points, of which the one you have already experienced is not the least. Your best course when you saw the hen beginning to dabble about with both nesting holes was to have put the slide in over one of them and thus made her limit her attention to one nest at a time. Arrange it now so that she can only utilise one nesting-hole, and re-mate this birds at any time you like, and let matters follow their own course as much as possible. Of course, if you choose to get a modern type of breeding cage and fittings, as illustrated in the book you have, so much the better, and you would doubtless find it far more satisfactory. Give the birds two or three crisp young leaves of dandelion daily now. (2) Early morning feeding is most beneficial when there are young to be fed, but it is not essential to adhere to any definite time. If you are "up with the lark," give the first feed of freshly-made food as soon as the birds are well on the move, or, say, somewhere about six a.m. If later than this, leave a very little fresh food in the cage last thing at night for the birds to go on with after daybreak.

A QUESTION OF AGE (Rollers, D. A. J.).—(1) One can at most only hazard a guess at the age of a bird of the breeding of which one has no definite knowledge. As the birds appear to be young, if the feet and legs are quite smooth and the claws short and needle-pointed, they were probably hatched last spring or early summer, and are now in their first year, and the coming season will be their first breeding season. (2) Such hens would make very serviceable ones for breeding Mules when consistency are the only object, and are certainly well worth trying. But if you wanted a good-sized Mule of good appearance, a Norwich or Yorkshire hen would be more desirable.

CAUSE OF DEATH (B. L. H.).—Nothing but a post-mortem could reveal the real cause of death in such a case as this. I should imagine it was either due to egg-laying with a fifth egg, or to acute pneumonia, for which the weather might well be responsible. This, however, is merely an opinion. I do not think there is the slightest reason to suppose that she died through fretting for her mate.

VENTILATING SHED (Border Fancy).—Sorry, but I cannot give you any very definite advice as to the best way of efficiently ventilating your bird-shed without a rough sketch or diagram to work on which should show the position of the door and windows, and also the existing apertures for ventilating purposes. In all probability what you now need is an inlet for fresh air near or in the floor, the latter if the shed is raised from the ground. If built on ground level the best position for this inlet is probably in the centre of the front. With the coming of summer it should be possible to have a portion of the window in front to open, and the space covered with a frame filled with small mesh netting to guard against the escape of any bird that may get loose from the cages. If you will send me a rough sketch as suggested, I will do my best to help you, or otherwise you might get all the hints you need from "Aviaries, Bird-rooms and Cages," which our Manager would send you for 2s. 3d., post free.

EGGS DISAPPEARING (Puzzled One).—Although not common, it is by no means rare for eggs to disappear after a hen has commenced to sit. The cause may be quite an innocent one when discovered. They may have been accidentally dragged out of the nest and smashed on the floor, when little trace may be left unless looked specially for; or the hen may have added a little more material to the nest, and thus buried them; or one or both of the birds may have taken a fancy to eggs for breakfast. Your best course will be to take away the cock when the hen begins to sit next time, and then if it happens again, save the eggs of the next clutch and put them under some other hen to be hatched and reared. There was no necessity to separate the birds.

RUFFLED AND WHEEZY (R. W. Dennis).—The bird is suffering from bronchial trouble, which may be due to the recent weather conditions. Cages of the box type would be quite the best for your birds. See that this one is kept in a fairly warm, but not overheated place, where the temperature is fairly equable, and the air pure and fresh, but void of cold draughts or the fumes of burning lights. In addition to the staple seed diet give, every second day, half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed. On the alternate days add to the drinking water four drops each of oxymel of squills, ipocachuanha wine, tincture of lobelia, and sweet spirit of nitre. Continue this treatment for two or three weeks as may seem necessary.

KEEPING SEED (Spanish).—(1) When stored in a perfectly dry, cool place, canary seed will keep in perfect condition for a long time, say, two years at least, which may be quite long enough for your purpose, provided, of course, that it is properly harvested and in good condition when it is stored. If the place is subject to any great variations of temperature you would need to watch that air-tight tin did not "sweat." (2) Maw and niger under the same conditions would keep in good condition for the same length of time. Of course, this does not imply that in each case the seed would not keep good much longer.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

LINNETS MOPY (Linnet Lover).—I gather from your letters that your Linnets are suffering from liver trouble caused by injudicious feeding and want of exercise. Dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a pea in two tablespoonfuls of water and add to it 3 drops of syrup of rhubarb. Give him this for one day only, and then repeat three days later. Offer a spoonful of soaked seeds daily until better, and also give him a young dandelion leaf gathered in the open, and as soon as you are able to collect the seed pods see that he has a liberal supply. When kept in small cages and fed generously these birds should have an aperient occasionally, particularly during the winter months when green food is scarce. I do not think you will be able to teach a Goldfinch Mule to sing the Linnet note only.

MULE ILL.—(M. Swift).—You have evidently been feeding your bird wrongly or he would not be in the condition he is. Your best treatment is to give him an aperient (if you have not already done so). Dissolve a teaspoonful of effervescent citrate of soda in three tablespoonfuls of water, and let him have three doses, giving it him every other day. Feed him on stale bread soaked in hot milk, and a spoonful of soaked seeds daily, gradually getting him back to ordinary diet with plenty of green food. Continue to occasionally bathe the eye places with a half-spoonful of boric acid powder dissolved in a teaspoonful of warm water. Make the powder into a paste first with a few drops of water before adding the quantity. If you see no improvement in a week's time you had better have the bird destroyed.

BREEDING FROM HEN MULES (Bird Lover).—A hen Mule paired in the way you suggest has been known to breed, but you must not rely upon this way of breeding. There are far more failures than successes. Your Linnet paired to a Canary hen would be better. (2) The price you paid was reasonable. (3) I fancy the birds you describe would be the common Hedge Sparrow. A characteristic habit of these is hunting along the bottom of the hedgerow for food. The song is rather shrill.

FEEDING A HAWK (K. I. Sayer).—In a state of nature Hawks live upon mice, small birds, voles, and large insects, mostly beetles, and you cannot do better than follow this way of feeding as much as possible. Let your neighbours know you want mice and they may occasionally bring you some. Sparrows are probably the only small birds you would get in your district. These should have the large wing feathers pulled out, and then given to the Hawk as fresh as possible. You will have to make up any deficiency of natural food with butcher's scraps. It is essential for health that these birds should occasionally have a mouse or bird to eat while it is still warm.

STOCK MIXTURE FOR AVIARY (Aviaries).—A good stock mixture for your Finches would be the following: Canary 3 parts, teazle 2 parts, rape 1 part. Make up another mixture of equal parts niger, maw, hemp, gold of pleasure, dandelion, and lettuce, and give a little every other day, and supply daily a small handful of sunflower seed. This will be for the Goldies, Bullies, and Greenfinches. Notice if the Goldies get their share, as they are the most likely to require a variety. (2) You could keep two pairs of birds comfortably in the largest of your aviaries, and the smallest would do for a pair, or three single birds. Supply all of them pretty liberally now with green food and bunches of wild seeds as they come into season.

LINET NOT SINGING (E. Goodwin).—After reading your letter, the first thing that occurs to me is the question of the sex of your bird. Are you certain that it is a cock? A healthy bird should be in song now, and you appear to be feeding and otherwise treating him well. You might offer him a dandelion leaf daily and give the seedling heads as soon as they are ready, and if you can get some extra good hemp seed, lightly crack a few grains and let him have them every day until he commences to break into song, when supply every other day, and gradually diminish it, as it is rather too forcing for summer use. A little germinated seed is a nice change for them, and assists to bring them along.

BREEDING REDPOLL-CANARY MULES (A. Novice, A. L. B.).—You appear to be treating your bird correctly, excepting that you make no mention of green food; a little given now would be beneficial. When the hen begins to get "fussy," flying from perch to perch in an excited manner, you can give her a nest pan and some building materials, such as moss and cowhair. She will then probably build and lay, when the eggs should be removed each morning and a dummy one substituted. Return them when you see she intends to sit, and on the thirteenth day give a little egg food to rear the young ones with. If the Redpoll is at all troublesome to her while she is sitting, or breaks any of the eggs, he must be shut off by himself; she will rear the young without his assistance. If you are interested in Mule breeding, you should get our book, "The Secrets of Hybrid Breeding," 1s. 2d. post free. It will give you an end of information about feeding and general management of muling pairs and Hybrids.

PAIRING UP (Just Commencing).—You do not tell me if you have your birds all together; if you have, I expect the hens have already paired with the cock Canary. With your next nest you can run the two hens with the Linnets, keeping each pair in a separate breeding cage. If your hen Linnet has nested before, it seems almost like wasting her to run her with a Canary. A Goldfinch or Siskin would make a much better partner. Good young ones bred from her with either of these cocks would be valuable. Give your cock Canary a little mixed seed three times a week, and a spoonful of chemical food in his drinking water, using boiled water or it will not mix. If you get another hen Canary you could run her with the Redpoll.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

COCKATIELS UNHEALTHY (Burry).—I consider the birds have been coddled too much. Neither Cockatials nor Budgerigars need a heated aviary. Quarters that secure them against draught and damp, and which allow space for exercise, are all they require. Again, they do not need milk soap, and I should attribute most of your trouble to this. As soon as the weather is settled stop all heat and give all the ventilation possible without creating a draught. Canary, millet, and white oats ad lib. ditto green food, will form the main dietary. When they are feeding young keep a pan of dry pieces of biscuit and stale crusts in the aviary. Cuttle-bone, grit, and water must always be in the cage or aviary. Gradually cease supplying the milk soap, wearing them therefrom as soon as possible. By such means you should succeed in rearing healthy stock, and a recurrence of the trouble should not occur.

LAVENDER-HEADED LOVEBIRD (Constant Reader).—The bird is a male and would be the better for a larger cage; one not less than 20in. long with three perches of different thicknesses, say 1, 1 and 1 diameter, but more oval than round. Your diet is about right, but give it tufts of grass to play with, and though it refuses banana it would probably take apple. Cattlebone should always be hanging in the cage. Once a week put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water, and on the other days lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food. Whenever the days are nice and genial hang it where it can get an abundance of light and air without draught. The feather-dropping should cease in due course.

AMAZON MOUTING (Regular Reader).—So far as I can gather from the mere fact given me, you have no cause for anxiety, as unless there are other adverse symptoms the shedding of the feathers is quite normal. Had you told how you were feeding and treating it, and where it was kept, I could have been more definite. At this time it would be well to put a teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water once a week, and on the other days to well colour the water with chemical food.

GREEN PARROT (Brazilian).—The bird is evidently a Blue-fronted Amazon, and "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit," id. post free from our Manager, would help you as to treatment, etc. The dietary may be summed up as: Seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, with biscuits, little plain cake, and crusts as extras. Cattlebone must be continually in the cage, also grit; likewise a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon. Once acclimatised they are very hardy, and should be kept in a light and airy, but not draughty, position.

WHAT KIND AND WILL IT TALK? (E. Wilson).—It is a Roseate or Rose-breasted Cockatoo. The majority do not make acrobatic and amusing pets. Some few become really talented and have quite a large vocabulary. It should be fed on seed mixture, any kind of ripe fruit it will take, nuts, and such extras as pieces of biscuit, plain cake and stale crusts. A piece of raw carrot is wholesome and usually readily eaten. In addition, water, cattlebone, and grit must be continually in the cage; also a chunk of wood for the bird to exercise its mandibles upon. It should be protected from draught, but otherwise have a light and airy position.

PANAMA AMAZON WITH COLD? (Mrs. Burgess).—Many Amazons moult at this time of year, though a bird kept in a position where the temperature is continually up and down will often shed a few feathers at every change on and off through the year. All Parrots should be kept in as even a temperature as possible. Once a week put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the water, and on the other days well colour the drinking water with chemical food. Spray or bathe the nostrils every other day with a tepid solution of glyco-thymoline. Keep cattlebone and grit continually in the cage; also a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon. Continue the above till the bird has entirely recovered tone.

CANARY AND FOREIGN FINCH CROSSES ("Experiment").—I should say the probability of successfully crossing the Java Sparrow with the Canary was very small indeed, but not impossible. In each instance the hen bird had better be the Canary, choosing a variety which would be somewhat similar in size to the species it was crossed with. The better plan, if you have an aviary, would be to put in a variety of Foreign Finch cocks, together with an equal number of Canary hens, and leave them to choose their own mates. All the following species have been successfully crossed with the hen Canary, and you should make your attempt with some of them. Grey and Green Singing Finches, Grey-necked and Yellow-rumped Serins, St. Helena, and Bearded Seed-eaters, American, Hooded, and Black-headed Siskins, Alario, Saffron, Purple, and Serin Finches, also Sulphury Seed-eater. Success has been attained with all the above, both in cage and aviary.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 2s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Pekin Nightingale (J. Canavan).—Very few of these charming birds seem to have been offered lately; in fact the importation of foreign birds generally has, with most other things, been restricted through the war. Perhaps a short advert. in our wanted columns would elicit an offer.

J. E. F.—Your newsgate has no justification whatever for charging more for CAGE BIRDS than the price (one penny) marked on the front page. If you will forward us his name and address we will communicate with him in the matter.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS

make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, and a leading Expert and Judge. Edited by G. E. Weston and C. A. House.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all are considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

RARE AND BEAUTIFUL PARROTS.

Our artist, Mr. Goodchild, has here depicted two of the many rarities which are to be seen on the benches of our bird shows. On the left is one of the pair of beautiful White-winged Parrakeets exhibited at the Holborn Hall Show by Miss Alfreda B. Smyth, of Catford, and the other bird is the delightful little Meyer's Parrot "Bessie," which has been shown with such great success by the Rev. G. H. Raynor, of Hazeleigh. An account of "Bessie's" performances on the show bench appears in this issue.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing his receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned to the same means as were used in sending this same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

NOT SINGING.

If you have any birds you are relying upon for the breeding season that have gone into Soft Moults, we Guarantee you a perfect cure.

DITCHFIELD'S TONIC DROPS

are a certain cure for loss of voice, soft moult, slow moult, going light, feather plucking, and inflammation of the bowels.

DITCHFIELD'S FAMOUS REVIVO

is absolutely unequalled for giving new life and vigour to the birds, and for producing that smart light appearance of the plumage so much desired by all fanciers.

These two Medicines given on alternate days will bring any bird into breeding condition.

DITCHFIELD'S SPECIAL LUNG TONIC,

the grandest medicines ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. Can be given with absolute confidence to the most weak or delicate birds. All medicines can be given in the drinking water, and the birds take them freely with marvellous results.

SPECIAL NOTICE:

We ask all fanciers who have got any birds that are not quite in the best of condition to give our Medicines a trial at once, as it is often too late when the breeding season is upon us.

All the above remedies are sold in 1/2 and 2/2 bottles; two 1/2 bottles for 1/11, three for 2/8, four for 3/6; two 2/2 bottles for 3/9, three for 5/6, four for 6/9. P.S.—Owing to the scarcity of glass bottles we are unable to get the 8d. size to sell retail, but would like customers to know that the 1/2 bottles are treble size the 8d. bottles. All orders are sent away POST FREE per return form.

GENT'S AND BOYS' SUITS FREE!

Astounding Offer for a few weeks only to "Cage Birds"
Readers! Send only a post card and save pounds.

Now readers, would you like a suit or pair of trousers absolutely free? Perhaps your boy also? A most astounding offer is being made by a well-known London firm! They have discovered a remarkable Holeproof Cloth. You can't tear it! Yet it looks just the same as £3 or £4 suitings. You can't wear it out, no matter how hard you wear it, for if during six months of solid hard grinding work every day of the week (not just Sundays), you wear the smallest hole, another garment will be given free! The firm will send a written guarantee in every parcel. Think, readers, just 15s. 3d. for a man's suit, and only 4s. 9d. for a pair of trousers, or boy's suit 5s. 11d., knickers 2s. 3d., guaranteed for six months' solid grinding wear; and replaced free of charge if hole appears.

The Cloth.

As previously stated, this really marvellous cloth is absolutely untearable—you cannot tear it, no matter how hard you try; but possibly the thought arises that being of such hard-wearing quality, it must resemble in some shape or form the ordinary old-fashioned cord. That is not so. Side by side with the very latest designs in tweeds, and the best of our fancy worsteds, readers without testing the cloth would be unable to say which was holeproof and which was ordinary tweed. It is absolutely identical in appearance, and for considerably less than a sovereign, it is possible to obtain the design and colouring which in ordinary tweeds could not be procured under £3 or £4. The designs are suitable for office and best wear and field or rough wear, so that readers, whether at work or at leisure, need have no hesitation in wearing garments made from this remarkable cloth. The cloth could not be torn by a barbed wire fence, it is quite impossible to tear it, and the manufacturers predict that just as soon as the public learn of its remarkable wearing qualities, ordinary tweeds and serges will become a thing of the past. For your boys it is the very cloth.

Prices Extraordinary.

The prices of garments in this holeproof cloth are truly remarkable—of course, they are cut very low, more or less, to induce the public to test the cloth. It is possible to procure a really well-cut, smartly-finished suit consisting of jacket, vest, and trousers for the absurd sum of 15s. 3d., whilst a pair of trousers guaranteed for six months' solid hard wear could be obtained for merely 4s. 9d., or gent's riding, cycling, or walking breeches for 6s. 3d. Boys' Suits from 5/11, knickers 2/3.

Method in Making.

Readers naturally ask the question, can these goods be well made for the money? Here again is the result of the employment of modern methods and machinery, the outcome of years of experimentation, which have rendered it possible to supply a suit of clothes for 15s. 3d., which our grandfathers could not possibly have obtained at anything like treble the price. As an instance of the labour-saving devices, it must be mentioned that every sewing machine used in the making of these garments is driven by electric power; no work except the actual guidance of the garments through the machine falls on the worker, with the result that double and treble the quantity of garments can be turned out with absolute assurance that every garment is really well made. This is one instance of how the method carried from the beginning to the end of the business has resulted in a better and cheaper article for the public.

The Result.

Readers would do well to investigate this offer at once, before the rush, and the result to themselves will be a considerable saving of money in their tailoring bills, besides being able to wear garments made from a cloth which looks really smart, and yet will wear even better than the ordinary common cords.

Generous Free Samples for Readers.

To induce readers to give this remarkable cloth a trial, the manufacturers offer to send (if readers will send merely a 1d. postcard asking for free samples) a generous supply of cloth cuttings, fashions, and a most remarkable measurement chart, which will enable readers to measure themselves, as well as any tailor could measure them. This will be sent absolutely free of charge by return of post. Readers must not delay a day, but should study the advertisement beneath, and send a postcard for the free samples of cloth cuttings. Remember, send now, while prices remain low.

SEASONABLE TIPS FOR BIRDKEEPERS

Finches should now be getting into condition for Mule and Hybrid breeding.

If they appear backward, help them along with dandelion seed-heads, thistle seed, and all natural seeds.

A good mixture is equal parts of maw, gold of pleasure, sesame seed, and chipped sunflower.
